Sir, I have endeavored to give a respectful answer to the message of the President. I am willing, according to the Republican national platform of 1884, to "correct the irregularities of the tariff and reduce the surplus, not by the vicious and indiscriminating process of horizontal reduction, but by such methods as will relieve the tax-payer, without injuring the laborer or the great productive interests of the country." It is upon this basis that Republican reductions of taxation have always been made.

I am willing, as requested by the President, to join in a careful examination of the details of our tariff laws, with a view to the reduction of taxes to the extent stated by him, but not in the manner recommended by him. I am willing, as he enjoins us, to take "a broad and national contemplation of the subject, and a patriotic disregard of such local and selfish claims as are unreasonable and reckless of the welfare of the entire country." But I can not do this and at the same time follow the recommendations of the message. I can not strike at the industrial interests built up by our tariff laws. I can not deepen and intensify the struggle now going on between employers and employed by inviting increased importation, crippling manufactures, and reducing the wages of labor. I greatly prefer a policy that will encourage home industry, diversify home productions, discourage importations, add to our internal and external commerce, open new mines, increase raw materials, light new furnaces, establish new rolling-mills, factories, and workshops, and develop the wonderful natural resources which have been placed by a bountiful Providence under our soil.

I prefer that policy which looks to the interest of our own people rather than to those of foreign nations. I prefer the policy of reducing prices by home competition rather than by foreign competition, of cheapening raw materials, by increased production, and the improvement of our rivers and harbors, and the competition of our railroads. In other words, I prefer the development, increase, and growth of the productions and employment of our own countrymen, by the aid of our revenue laws, without respect to the policy, or theories, or interests of other nations.

Whatever may be said in favor of free trade among all nations, I believe that, as a new and undeveloped country, our interests are at home, with no entangling alliances, with no powerful enemies on our borders, with no need of great armies or navies, with a Government strong in the strength, numbers, and intelligence of its people, and capable of supplying within themselves all the wants of the highest civilization. Whatever may be said of other nations, protection to home industries, embodied in our tariff laws, is the best for us; and for one I propose to maintain it, even against the advice of the President.

I prefer to obey the injunction of Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, and Lincoln, and such illustrious statesmen as Clay and Webster. I greatly prefer the eloquent appeal of Calhoun in 1816, before sectional animosities clouded his patriotism, in favor of the protection and importance of manufactures to the "national strength and perfection of our political institutions," and in "binding more closely our widespread Republic."

The wisdom of protection to domestic manufactures has been demonstrated by the lights of experience during and since the war.

It has produced the most bounteous stream of revenue, enabling us to meet all the vast expenditures of the war, to sustain and improve our public credit, and to rapidly reduce the public debt without severity or distress.

It has so increased and diversified our domestic manufactures that they have grown to the enormous sum of seven thousand million dollars, including every article of necessity or desire, and yet in every stage of its growth has reduced the cost to the consumer more and more.

In spite of false prophecies it has increased our foreign commerce so that our exports and imports combined, including specie, amounted to the sum of $1,504,000,000 during the last fiscal year, greater far than during any year of lower duties, and double that of our foreign commerce prior to 1860.

This American policy of protection has been adopted and followed by all European nations except Great Britain, and has been approved and copied by the ablest statesmen of Europe, including Bismarck and Cavour. It has even been adopted and copied by all the dependencies of Great Britain. Our neighbor, Canada, when armed by the parent Government with autonomy and power to make laws for itself, has adopted our policy in nearly all its details, has almost copied our tariff laws, and in some of the schedules, especially that of metals, has literally adopted our rates. Australia and all the dependencies of Great Britain armed with self-government are closely following our line of policy, and thus have grown rapidly in strength and population. It is the desire of the people of Ireland to gain the consent of Great Britain that she may, by home rule, protect her industries and thus restore her waste places and recover her wandering population.

Great Britain alone pursues the policy of free trade, only because by centuries of protection she has so established her manufactures that she can compete with all the nations of the world. She is purely a commercial nation, with her ships on every shore, with her hand of power grasping possessions and markets for her surplus manufactures in every part of the habitable globe. But even in England there is a growing party demanding restriction upon the importation of the products of Germany, France, and Belgium. When in some distant future this Republic may have so established our industries we may profit by her example. Until then I prefer to follow the lights of our experience, not to be deluded by the sophisms of free trade, but to preserve our home market for domestic productions, looking forward to the time when competition at home may open the markets of the world to our manufacturers. Even now we can, if we will, by wise commercial regulations with Canada and Mexico and the South American states, extend the market for our home manufactures over vast regions, exchanging tools and implements, cotton goods, and furniture for sugar and coffee and other tropical productions in the south, and lumber, timber, and furs in the north.

Senators, we do not appreciate as we ought the commanding position now held by the United States among the nations of the world. We do not need to learn lessons of political economy from the mother country, for the experience of one hundred years has taught us that our continental position, our vast undeveloped resources, our diversified soil, climate, and productions, our free institutions, founded upon the equality and rights of citizens, bound together by the same language, religion, and laws, demand a line of public policy which less-favored nations, watching each other and jealously curbed by "the balance of power," are not free to adopt. Our ancestors won independence from these thralls. Our fathers won the freedom of the ocean and proclaimed the doctrine of continental exemption from European aggressions. We in our day have tested the strength of our Union. We have abolished slavery. We have established the principles upon which our currency and public faith are founded so as to command the respect and approval of the civilized world. We are now united in bonds of growing strength and I trust in perpetual union. We have built up our industries by a policy founded upon the highest patriotism. Its success is marked by the general wealth and prosperity of our people. While taxing them it seeks to benefit, and it extends its benefits impartially to every industry and to every section. It gives employment to the laborer in every field. It concentrates in our own land and among our own people agriculture, commerce, and manufactures, making each support the others and all contributing to the wealth and grandeur of the Republic. These great departments of industry are not now divided by sectional lines, but are interwoven like the veins, arteries, and muscles of the human body. They are being established North, South, East, and West, in every State of the Union. The great Northwest, with its boundless resources, is contributing every variety of productions to the common wealth.

What we want now is the cultivation of the sentiment of patriotism, an intense love of country, a feeling of national pride. It should be taught in infancy, after the first lisping of "father" and "mother." The school-boy should study the lesson of our wonderful history, achievements, and progress in every stage of his education. The city editor should read a river and harbor bill to learn how many places there are in this country not seen from his eyrie in the high tower. Every American, whether native or naturalized, ought to feel that this is his country, to which he owes allegiance, duty, and pride. The President, any President, in his elevated seclusion, approached only by flatterers and office-seekers, should regard the interests and honor of his country, its development and prosperity, and the employment and happiness of his countrymen as higher far than the interest of foreigners or the cheapness of their products.

It is to the Senate only I have a right to appeal. It was designed by the framers of the Constitution as a conservative check upon changes of law which would injuriously affect the persons and property of American citizens. The best we can do for mankind is to do the best for our country. We give to foreign nations the light of our example, but our duty is to our own. What higher duty can there be than to be watchful of the interests and to protect, foster, and diversify the industries of our own people?

Our country's welfare is our first concern,
And who promotes that best, best proves his duty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President——

Mr. BLAIR. As the Senator desires to speak on the pending motion, I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, to be resumed at the conclusion of the Senator's address.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the unfinished business will be informally laid aside. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] is entitled to the floor on the pending resolution.

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator will excuse me a moment, I desire to say that I have been appealed to by some one in behalf of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], who had the right to the floor during the morning hour, that if the unfinished business came up before the conclusion of his address it should be informally laid aside, and I have been also notified that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] wished an opportunity to speak on the other side of the question. I hope no one will ask me for any further delay in the consideration of the unfinished business.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, the subject of taxation is as old as government itself, in whatever form, whether human or divine, government has been established on the earth, and yet it is as fresh and full of interest to-day to the laboring masses of mankind as ever at any former period of the world's history. Conflicts of opinion arise, debates ensue, and controversies rage now as they have from the tithing and taxing days of Israel down to the present time. On the one hand government has a paramount right to the support of its citizens as long as it does not transcend its rightful power nor oppress them with extortions beyond its legitimate requirements, while on the other hand the very laws of nature, those supreme and indestructible principles on which rest the natural rights of man, keep the people imbued with a perpetual vigilance against the needless exactions and lawless greed of those in power.

Nothing more important in popular estimation, nor more calculated to produce public agitation, and indeed revolution, can be conceived than such an issue when persisted in, with the exception perhaps of an actual invasion of the liberties and the lives of the people by armed power. At the very foundation of the American Revolution will be found the question of unjust taxation. Our forefathers dismembered the British kingdom, then the foremost power in the world, rather than submit to oppression in that form; and in the Constitution they framed for their great and triumphant independence the powers of the Government in taking the earnings of the people in order to defray public expenses were clearly defined and scrupulously guarded. The idea that more money might, could, or ever should be taken from the pockets of the American people by taxation and placed in the Treasury than was absolutely necessary to defray the actual expenses of the Government economically administered had no existence in the early days of the Republic and no place in the thoughts or purposes of its immortal founders.

Money withdrawn by the hand of the tax-gatherer, whether acting directly or indirectly, whether acting visibly or invisibly—money thus taken from the business transactions of the country, from the active channels of trade, and laid away in Government vaults, idle, useless, and dead, is a spectacle belonging to modern times, modern methods, and modern parties. To contract the volume of currency in circulation, to make money scarce amongst the people, and consequently hard to obtain even in exchange for low-priced labor, depreciated property, or high rates of interest, has always been a financial policy marked by disaster and suffering and accursed by every friend of the general welfare of his countrymen; but when this abominable policy is still further aided and executed by snatching the money of the people from their very hands, at the rate of $10,000,000 a month, as the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] admitted was being done now, without necessity, excuse, or palliation, every honest mind must revolt against such wanton robbery.

Overtaxation! Overtaxation! Sir, it is a crime against every home, every fireside, and every laboring man and woman in the United States. It is a crime, national in its proportions, gigantic in its strength, omnipresent in its visitations, and brutal in its rapacity. When the life-blood is drained from the human body by the hand of murder we know that the chill and paralysis of death must ensue, and we know equally well when the earnings of the laboring people are seized by an all-pervading, universal system of overtaxation, and swept out of useful circulation, that every neighborhood, every business community, every branch of industry must experience the stagnation and hardships produced by a drainage so unjust, so criminal, so unnatural, and so inconsistent with the life and prosperity of all the labor interests of the country.

It will be remembered that just as we were adjourning for the recent recess a flurry took place on the other side of this Chamber—a squall it might be styled in nautical phrase, presaging perhaps more dirty and stormy weather from the same point of compass hereafter. In the midst of this premonitory tempest the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] undertook to dispose of the question of overtaxation by a contemptuous and elaborate sneer. After severely upbraiding the President for dealing with only one single question in his late annual message to Congress, the Senator exclaimed:

He reserved himself entirely for this great impending disaster; and what is it? The surplus that is accumulating in the Treasury.

This is the new disaster, the biennial disaster, the disaster which comes in aid of a support to the Executive opinion, the disaster which is presented to frighten the country and alarm the people into submitting to legislation that their judgment and their cool deliberation do not sanction. What is it? Fifty-five million dollars of surplus in the Treasury of the United States to-day. What a wonderful surplus is $55,000,000!

With what lofty contempt the Senator from the Rocky Mountains looks upon the sum of fifty-five millions of surplus taxation! Sir, I have recently been in the State represented by the Senator. I looked upon her lofty ranges, towering peaks, and blooming valleys; I lingered about her delicious and healing springs, and saw, as it were, the dead brought back to life; I studied her tremendous mineral resources, her capacity to supply the world with silver; and I witnessed her gold, her silver, and her precious stones put into form and condition for the various uses of mankind. It was indeed, to my mind, a land of wonder and enchantment, and it seemed well calculated to enlarge the views and expand the conceptions of every beholder. I was prepared to understand that many matters and things which appear great and important to people in less-favored countries are small there by comparison, but I was not prepared to believe that even in Colorado fifty-five millions of money, abstracted needlessly from the hard earnings of the American people, was regarded as an insignificant and paltry affair, to be sneered out of the way. I was not prepared to believe that the busy, pushing, enterprising citizens of that great, progressive, and rapidly-developing young State would indorse the contraction of the currency they so much need to the extent of fifty-five millions, or to any extent, by unnecessary and extortionate taxation, especially when they behold the same iniquitous process continuing into the future at the rate of ten millions a month.

But the weighty utterances of another Senator fell upon my ear that blustering afternoon, just before recess, which I desire to recall, and which I think the tax-paying laborers of the country will not soon forget. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] speaks as one in authority in the councils of his party. His words bind and unbind its policies to as great an extent as those of any other living man. It is true they were not cabled from Paris in all haste under the deep sea, as if the world was in breathless expectation and doubt until he was heard from, but nevertheless, spoken here in the Senate of the United States, they are full of significance and binding force. The Senator from Ohio distinctly declared it "fortunate" for the country that there were $55,000,000 of surplus revenue in the Treasury. Approving the assaults made by other Senators on the President and his message, the Senator from Ohio indulged in the following language:

It seems to me it is reasonable and right when such a state of affairs exists, when the country is about to be frightened and business men are alarmed lest something terrible should happen because the money of the country is gathered into the Treasury, that the humbug should be at least punctured, or exploded, or explained away to a certain extent.

One of the chief blessings and glories of our form of government is the fact that within the next twelve months the citizens of the Republic will have a free and unrestrained opportunity to declare whether in their opinion it is fortunate for them to bear the tyranny of a vast and enormously increasing surplus taxation, and also whether a very able, courteous, and dignified state paper from the Chief Magistrate of the country to the representatives of the people and of the States should be denounced as a humbug because he laid bare the outrage and urgently recommended remedial legislation. The Senator speaks lightly of the fact that "the money of the country is gathered into the Treasury," and scouts the idea of danger or oppression on that account. "Money of the country gathered into the Treasury!" For what object, for what public purpose known to the Constitution, is the money of the country gathered from the fields, the workshops, the marts of trade and commerce, and dumped in huge surplus heaps in the Treasury? Surplus is thus defined by Webster:

That which remains when use is satisfied; excess beyond what is prescribed or wanted; overplus.

I commend this definition of the surplus now in the Treasury and rapidly swelling to the careful consideration of the Senator from Ohio, and I also commend it to the careful consideration of the American people. That surplus is what remains after the use for which money is properly placed there is satisfied; it is the excess beyond what is prescribed by the Constitution or wanted for any defined or specified purpose of the Government; it is simply an overplus, a waste, something not needed where it is, but sorely needed elsewhere.

It will be for the Senator from Ohio and his followers, if he should be the standard-bearer of his party in the contest of 1888, on whose skirmish lines we are now facing each other, to explain to the people why it is fortunate that their money is gathered into the Treasury as a surplus, in excess of all uses, prescriptions, or wants on the part of the Government, rather than it should remain in their own hands.

But the leaders and the press of the Republican party are making strenuous, constant, and audacious efforts to evade and obscure the real and in fact the only issue, so boldly, ably, and opportunely proclaimed and emphasized by the President in his recent message in behalf of the overtaxed labor and business of the country. These efforts are transparently dishonest and will not succeed. They have but small lodgment now in the public mind, and they will have none at all after full discussion has taken place and every principle and position of the Executive, and also of his adversaries, are clearly understood. The plain, naked issue presented by the Executive in his masterly message is a reduction of taxes down to the actual expenses of the Government, as against the maintenance of the present system, whereby the gains of daily labor and the profits of trade are absorbed, without just cause or public reason, into the already flooded and overflowing vaults of the Treasury. Shall such reduction be made, or shall needless and dishonest burdens remain upon the people? That is the question now propounded every day from one ocean to the other, and Congress alone can give an answer.

In moving forward, however, to reduce the taxes of the Government to the line of Government expenses the very first step discloses the powerful forces and fortifications which appear to block the way, and with implements of warfare more potent than cannon or sword defend the present system and forbid reform. The vast and commanding manufacturing interests of the country are invoked into the field of discussion and controversy as allies of the Republican party, allies of excessive taxation, of surplus revenues, of a plethoric overplus in the crowded coffers of the Treasury. More than a hundred years have rolled away since our existence as an independent power began; a hundred years of such majestic development of the industrial and manufacturing forces has taken place as the world never before witnessed. American skill, energy, and resources in furnishing supplies for all the wants of mankind stand foremost among the nations of the earth, and yet the leaders of the Republican party insist with loud and vehement pertinacity that all the mighty manufacturing establishments of the United States, from which have emanated such wonderful and glorious results, will at this late day, this high noon of their power and greatness, collapse and perish by the wayside, unless sustained and protected by an elaborate system of tribute and extortion levied on their laboring countrymen.

I am unwilling to believe that American manufacturers are fairly represented by those who assume to speak thus for them in Congress. I am unwilling to believe in the unpatriotic and absolute selfishness attributed to them here and elsewhere by their self-constituted and misguided friends. I prefer to look upon them as an able, enterprising class of American citizens, deeply imbued with love of country, guided by an unselfish desire for the general welfare, and inspired with a readiness to share in common with their fellow-countrymen all the sacrifices and burdens necessary to secure justice, fair dealing, and good government. In this light I have been accustomed heretofore to regard them in my personal intercourse, and in the discharge of my public duties, and I hope and expect to be warranted in maintaining the same favorable views under all the varying circumstances of the future.

But in this connection there appears a feature of political warfare on the part of the opponents of the present Administration which, while neither novel, nor truthful, nor even decent, calls for attention for those very reasons. The power of misrepresentation comes apparently as a preternatural gift to a certain class of minds, and it seems, within the last thirty days, to have been bestowed in a Pentecostal shower on Republican Senators and Members of the House, and on every other speaker and writer for the Republican party whenever they discuss the attitude of the Democratic party, and of its leader, Grover Cleveland, on the subject of the tariff.

A determined, persistent, and brazen campaign of willful mendacity seems now opened on that subject, and it will continue in the councils and in the field work of the Republican party, day by day, morning, noon, and night, until the frosts of next November come to wither and blast alike their falsehoods and their hopes. The initial point, as well as the key to the arch of the political canvass of 1888, on the part of Republican managers, is, to assume and boldly charge, in season and out of season, that the present Democratic Chief Magistrate and his followers, the entire Democratic party, are in open and bitter hostility to all the manufacturing industries of the United States, wish them nothing but evil, and are in league with British free trade, bribed with British gold, for their destruction. The colossal calumny embodied in this charge, now ringing all along the lines of the Republican party, like a bugle-call to action, stands refuted, overwhelmed, and trampled into the dust by every act of the Democratic party during the glorious and ever-to-be remembered epochs of its former history, and also by every utterance of the President now in power, including especially his recent message, now under discussion.

Sir, it is proper under these circumstances to go to the record of facts, and take a careful and reliable reckoning. It is true the saying has been that falsehood travels with a seven-leagued stride, while truth follows afterwards with a slower gait; yet I have faith that truth will prevail even in such an unequal race.

Let us look for a few moments into that grand declaration of national principles and purposes put forth at Chicago in 1884, by the authorized representatives of the Democracy of every State in the Union, and on which the confidence of the people was secured, and a great victory won. Let us see, first, whether the charge that the Democratic party is in favor of free trade, and therefore hostile to our manufacturing industries, can be sustained, and, second, whether it is true that the President has departed in a single iota, jot, or tittle from the distinctly-declared policies on which he was elected.

The pledge of the Democratic party at the Chicago convention of 1884, to reduce the taxes of the American people, was bold, explicit, and peremptory. It was made in a few plain, strong words, the meaning of which it was impossible to pervert or misunderstand:

All taxation shall be limited to the requirements of economical government.

And again:

The Democracy pledges itself to purify the administration from corruption, to restore economy, to revive respect for law, and to reduce taxation to the lowest limit consistent with due regard to the preservation of the faith of the nation to its creditors and pensioners.

Sir, it is not to be wondered that a political platform containing such pledges as these should encounter the fierce opposition of those who, like the Senator from Ohio, regard an idle surplus in the Treasury a fortunate thing, and the overtaxation which placed it there a blessing to the people, or of those who, like the Senator from Colorado, turn up their noses disdainfully at $55,000,000, abstracted without any just cause whatever from the channels of trade, as a trifling circumstance.

The reduction of taxation thus pledged by the Democratic party necessarily implied a revision of our system of revenue, and many material changes in our present legislation. This great fact was not evaded by the Chicago convention, nor treated of in any double or doubtful sense. It was pointed out that the Tariff Commission created by Congress in 1882 reported in favor of a general reduction of import duties to the extent of 20 per cent., and that by the tariff act of 1883 a reduction of less than 4 per cent. had been made. It was very obvious, therefore, that it was the purpose of the Democratic party, if placed in power, to reduce taxation by a still further reduction of the duties paid on imported merchandise. It pledged itself "to revise the tariff in a spirit of fairness to all interests," and then proceeded to say:

But in making reduction in taxes it is not proposed to injure any domestic industries, but rather to promote their healthy growth. From the foundation of this Government taxes collected at the custom-house have been the chief source of Federal revenue; such they must continue to be. Moreover, many industries have come to rely on legislation for successful continuance, so that any change of law must be at every step regardful of the labor and capital thus involved. The process of reform must be subject, in the execution, to this plain dictate of justice.

And again, the following assurances were given:

The necessary reduction in taxation can and must be effected without depriving American labor of the ability to compete successfully with foreign labor, and without imposing lower rates of duty than will be ample to cover any increased cost of production which may exist in consequence of the higher rate of wages prevailing in this country.

Sufficient revenue to pay all the expenses of the Federal Government, economically administered, including pensions, interest and principal of the public debt, can be got, under our present system of taxation, from custom-house taxes on fewer imported articles, bearing heaviest on articles of luxury and bearing lightest on articles of necessity.

We therefore denounce the abuses of the existing tariff, and, subject to the preceding limitations, we demand that Federal taxation shall be exclusively for public purposes, and shall not exceed the needs of the Government economically administered.

These provisions of the Democratic platform, on which Democratic success was secured in 1884, contain full notice to the country that Federal taxes were to be reduced to a point where no surplus would be left in the Treasury after paying for an economical administration of the Government, and they also gave ample and timely notice that this reduction was to be made in the custom-house duties now levied on foreign importations. It will also be seen, as a striking feature of these Democratic declarations, with what careful conservatism the manufacturing and labor interests are to be treated in the impending and absolutely necessary revision of our system of tariff taxation.

The policy put forth by the Democratic national convention in 1884 on the subject of the tariff and of taxes was the policy of the founders, the great leaders, and statesmen of the party. It has the sanction of such names as Jefferson, Madison, Jackson, Polk, Marcy, Silas Wright, Horatio Seymour, and others who by their commanding talents and lofty patriotism have illuminated and adorned American history. It was the policy of rigid economy, and of taxation not a dollar beyond actual public expenses; but in raising revenue to that extent by custom-house taxes it has always been, as it is now, the settled policy of the Democratic party to "be at every step regardful of the labor and capital involved" in American manufactories, and to afford them, by equitable adjustments, such incidental protection against foreign competition as must always necessarily and inevitably arise from a tariff laid on articles of traffic manufactured abroad. Incidental protection to the home manufacturer to the extent of the tariff paid by the foreign manufacturer for the privilege of bringing his goods here to sell is as certain as that the shadow of a man will follow him when the sun is shining.

It is this principle, from which there is no escape, which was recognized in the national Democratic platform already cited, and which calls for careful consideration and wise adjustment whenever tariff legislation is attempted.

Sir, I rejoice in every element of American success. I am proud of the inventive genius of this country and of its vast establishments where skilled labor abounds. I look with delight upon the cotton-mills, the coal-mines, the blast-furnaces, and rolling-mills of the South as well as upon those of New England, Pennsylvania, and of many Western States. I would encourage them in their gigantic career of development and usefulness by every legitimate means and by the exercise of every power confided to my hands by the Constitution, and I hold that the policy of the Democratic party has always been ample for their prosperity and progress.

More than that; it is the only safe policy for American manufacturers. Let it once be clearly understood that the manufacturers of this country as a class demand that they be enriched by using the powers of the Government to collect fraudulent taxes, remaining idle in the Treasury, solely for their benefit; let it be understood that they insist on a Chinese wall of high protection, built by a wanton, undisguised tribute levied on the farmer and on every other class of laborers, with no pretense that the Government needs a dollar of such unrighteous extortion; let it be understood that the manufacturers of the United States accept the guidance of the leaders of the Republican party and join in their praise of surplus taxation, now going on at the rate of ten millions a month, with no other reason whatever except to enhance their gains and swell their enormous profits; let all these facts be once understood and fasten themselves in the public mind, and then indeed will perils environ the manufacturing interests of this country such as have never been known before.

If every suggestion of relief to the tax-payer by a reduction of duties, however moderate in tone, reasonable in amount, and regardful of the manufacturer's investments, is to be met with the senseless, untruthful, and knavish cry of free trade, it will not be long until it will be made manifest that the minority can not rule and rob the majority of the American people. Free trade, to a mind knowing the meaning of words, signifies the repeal of all tariff laws, the abolition of all custom-houses, and a resort to direct taxation for revenue. If the Democratic party, with its record of more than fifty years' administration of the Government and its frank and constant declaration of principles, is to be charged with the folly of free trade every time an attempt is made to modify a tariff which is preying on the very vitals of labor and business, the people will very soon and very clearly find out that such assaults are only made to divert public attention from evil designs and schemes of plunder of which they are the victims.

I can not believe, however, that the strong, sagacious, and patriotic business men of the country in control of manufacturing industries will permit themselves for political purposes to be placed in an attitude of absolute injustice, selfish, overweening avarice, and disgraceful unfairness towards the great mass of their fellow-citizens. On a former occasion, more than five years ago, on this floor, I made the following statement, which I here now repeat:

I voted for the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] because I am one of those who believe there is no necessary antagonism between the agricultural and manufacturing industries of this country. I believe there is a safe, sound middle ground between the high protectionist per se on the one hand, and the wild free-trader and direct taxationist on the other; that the prosperity of this country lies where its growth and its development, both of lands and manufactures, will be best promoted and protected, and I hope before this session closes to embrace an opportunity to point out that true medium ground; that ground where I think all the industries of this country can be encouraged and harmonized, and at the same time a sufficient revenue obtained.

Again I said in my place as a member of this body:

I speak not in support of a tariff for revenue only, nor of a tariff for protection only, but in support of a tariff which collects the necessary revenue, and at the same time to the extent of that revenue extends protection with discriminating justice to American manufactories.

I am conscious of not the slightest change in my convictions on this subject from that hour to this.

But having pointed out what I conceive to be the true position of the Democratic party on the subject under discussion, I desire in this connection to consider next, and somewhat carefully, the message from the President, which has caused so much demoralized commotion amongst the leaders of the opposition. Sir, it is a pleasure to me to dwell on this remarkable state paper. It bears close and repeated scrutiny and study. It is true to the principles and teachings of the Democratic party from its foundation by Jefferson, eighty-seven years ago, to the present day.

The thanks of the laboring and business classes of the country, and, indeed, of every friend of equal and exact justice, are due to the Executive for seizing on this vital issue with the grasp of a strong, honest man, and placing it before his countrymen in such shape and light that it will never disappear until the wrongs exposed are redressed and the outrages of overtaxation shall cease. The opening statement of this message rings out on the air, and startles the drowsy camp-fires of both political parties, like a bugle-call on the field announcing the hour for action, and calling every man to his position. It is as follows, and will sound well in rehearsal again, even here in this stately presence:

The amount of money annually exacted, through the operation of present laws, from the industries and necessities of the people, largely exceeds the sum necessary to meet the expenses of the Government.

When we consider that the theory of our institutions guaranties to every citizen the full enjoyment of all the fruits of his industry and enterprise, with only such deduction as may be his share towards the careful and economical maintenance of the Government which protects him, it is plain that the exaction of a keen and able observer of men and affairs that those most conspicu-

more than this is indefensible extortion, and a culpable betrayal of American fairness and justice. This wrong inflicted upon those who bear the burden of national taxation, like other wrongs, multiplies a brood of evil consequences. The public treasury, which should only exist as a conduit conveying the people's tribute to its legitimate objects of expenditure, becomes a hoarding-place for money needlessly withdrawn from trade and the people's use, thus crippling our national energies, suspending our country's development, preventing investment in productive enterprise, threatening financial disturbance, and inviting schemes of public plunder.

In this age of vast and colossal monopoly, sucking the very life-blood of labor with equal fierceness and with more numerous and effective contrivances than the octopus, Victor Hugo's devil-fish of the sea; in this age of giant corporations which "clasp with hooked hands" the seaboards of each ocean boundary of the Republic, and rule all intermediate space and interests in their own favor and in utter disregard of the human toil on which all their huge proportions rest; in this age of enormous trust combinations, a new invention for establishing tyranny and oppression in business, for stamping out all rivalry and competition, for the maintenance of exorbitant prices, and for the aggrandizement of the power of consolidated money and the triumph of cruel, heartless, soulless monopolies; in this age of pools, syndicates, and gluttonous greed, when men plot, negotiate, and combine for the amassment of millions in the hands of the privileged few at the expense of the brawn and muscle of those who eat honest bread in the sweat of their faces; in this age of swollen pretense, sham aristocracy, and gilded vulgarity, based upon the labor of others almost, if not quite, as inadequately paid as in the South in the days of slavery; in such an age as this the splendid utterances which I have just read from the message of the President will fall upon the minds of the people as a token, a promise of relief, reform, and redemption from one who has never broken a pledge nor forgotten a public duty.

He declares for the lowly and the oppressed, and announces why, under our theory of government, it is "a culpable betrayal of American fairness and justice" as well as an "indefensible extortion" to rob the people under the guise of taxation. Since the matchless and immortal inaugural read by Jefferson on the 4th of March, 1801, no communication has emanated from the Chief Magistrate of this Government more able, more elevated in statesmanship, more humane and benevolent in its purposes to the people, or more conducive to the general welfare and to good government than the message now under consideration. Who will join issue with him on this opening statement which I have just read? He says the taxes wrung from the people are largely in excess of what the Government needs. Who denies that? He declares that every citizen is entitled to the "full enjoyment of all the fruits of his industry and enterprise, with only such deductions as may be his share toward the careful and economical maintenance of the Government which protects him." Who will gainsay this statement of a great fundamental doctrine of free government, unless it be the Senator from Ohio, who congratulates the people on having the fruits of their industry taken away from them and gathered into the Treasury? The other side of the Chamber has indicated, in a somewhat confused and disorderly way, its purpose to attack every point in the message. Let it be understood that there will not only be no unreadiness on this side to meet every such assault, but that we challenge and court the conflict.

But in addition to the espousal and indorsement of a surplus revenue created by excessive and unjust taxation, and a bitter opposition to the President on that point, the methods suggested in the recent message by which to remedy the already great and still growing evil have especially incited the hostility of those who, in a marked degree, have the interests of the Republican party in their keeping. The sources of Federal revenue are easily comprehended. The duties laid at our custom-houses on goods from abroad, seeking admission and sale here, and the internal or domestic taxes on spirituous and malt liquors, and on tobacco, furnish not only all the money required for actual expenses by the Government, but have created the enormous surplus now on hand, and continuing to increase with amazing and startling rapidity. The deep and fluent streams of money running from the hands of the people into the Treasury must be checked and diminished from one or the other of these prolific and superabundant fountains of revenue.

Where shall reduction of taxes begin? On what articles now affording an overplus shall it take place? These are questions which provoke contention, engender selfish conflicts, and really constitute the most serious difficulties we have to encounter. In the light, however, of Democratic principles, and the more than half a century of Democratic administration, and in view of the distinct declarations of the present Chief Magistrate, there need be no doubt as to the points where the Democratic party will seek to lighten the burdens of the people by lessening their taxes. To cheapen the price of such commodities as constitute the necessities of civilized life, and to place the burdens of government, as far as possible, on those articles which contribute to the luxurious habits and artificial tastes and appetites of mankind, is the true policy and the just exercise of the taxing power. It was declared by the Democratic party, in national convention assembled in 1884, that sufficient revenue for all legitimate purposes of the Government could be raised "from custom-house taxes on fewer imported articles, bearing heaviest on articles of luxury, and bearing lightest on articles of necessity."

Such is the position of the party now, and it will be adhered to in the approaching revision of the tariff. It is true that a very determined assault is being made on our internal-revenue system, and there is a strong purpose in various quarters to entirely abolish or greatly reduce the taxes now collected on spirituous and malt liquors and on tobacco. The result of this movement, should it succeed, is obvious at a glance. It would place before the American people free whisky and tobacco; it would cheapen the use of articles which are of no necessity, while it would retain and continue the present high duties on everything the people wear and on every implement of husbandry wherewith nearly ten million agriculturists prepare their fields and gather their harvests. The report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shows that for the year ending June 30, 1887, the sum of $118,837,301.06 was collected by his office, and all of it from distilled spirits, fermented liquors, and tobacco in its various forms, with the exception of $977,724.73 arising from oleomargarine and two or three other minor sources.

The Commissioner estimates that during the current fiscal year, ending June 30, 1888, there will be collected as internal revenue $120,000,000. It will be remembered that the President estimates the surplus which will have accumulated in the Treasury by present rates of taxation June 30, 1888, at the sum of $140,000,000, showing that even the total destruction of our whole internal-revenue system would not make a sufficient reduction to correct the evils by which we are confronted. Sir, I am fully aware that there are many and grave objections to internal-revenue taxation, and I am also aware that many worthy and patriotic people are opposed to its existence, upon grounds far different, however, from a desire to perpetuate for personal gain enormous and unjust taxes on the necessities of life. I appreciate the fact that for many years, and especially in certain States, the whole system, with all its peculiar forces, was used as a powerful instrument of partisan political warfare, and was rendered odious to every fair-minded citizen. We are also often reminded that it is a war tax, and that in times of peace it should pass away. All these considerations and others have their weight; but while the taxes laid by a war tariff on almost every article which enters into the daily wants and necessities of every man, woman, and child in the United States have in reality not been reduced at all, I submit, in all candor, that the work of reduction and reform should be pursued mainly in that field, and the internal-revenue system left to stand yet awhile, subject to certain modifications which can be made perhaps with advantage. For instance, the tax collected on tobacco for the year ending June 30, 1887, amounted to $30,108,067.13, and of this collection the sum of $12,682,137.19, was derived from cigars, cigarettes, cheroots, and snuff. Ithas occurred to me that this tax of over twelve millions and a half shouldbe retained, and that the remainder of the assessment on tobacco, amounting to over seventeen millions, might be remitted, in the general adjustment, now imperatively required. This, however, is a feature of detail, perhaps a feature of compromise, which I need not dwell on now, but which may become my duty to act upon hereafter. I am simply insisting at this time that the great bulk of abatement in the present totally unnecessary, and, therefore, vicious taxation of the people, must take place in a careful and prudent revision of the tariff, and I shall leave to the future what may seem to be the best means and arrangements by which to attain that end.

As a choice between reducing internal-revenue or tariff taxation, I shall labor to cheapen woolens, linens, cotton fabrics, salt, lumber, coal, iron, steel, and all the other great staple commodities, rather than such articles as are indulged in from acquired habits or luxurious modes of living.

Sir, I need hardly assure the Senate that I do not at this advanced period of political economy announce these views because of any charm of novelty or new invention. They are old and axiomatic; they contain self-evident and necessary truths, and no process of reasoning or demonstration can make them plainer, and yet because the President has maintained them in his late message he is assailed as if he had made a violent departure from every sound principle of government. In the following clear, terse sentence taken from the message is to be found the very marrow of the question now before us:

> The taxation of luxuries presents no features of hardship; but the necessaries of life used and consumed by all the people, the duty upon which adds to the cost of living in every home, should be greatly cheapened.

What higher, broader, stronger, platform than this is required for a victorious campaign of the year now just opened? In hoc signo vinces. The Democratic party will inscribe this great sentence on its colors, and challenge its adversaries to the arbitrament of the ballot. The result will not be doubtful.

But let us examine somewhat further as to the methods suggested, and the spirit manifested by the Executive in his very able and patriotic message. Falsely and foolishly stigmatized as a free-trade document, we find in it, speaking of the tariff, the following explicit avowal:

> It must be extensively continued as the source of the Government's income; and in a readjustment of our tariff the interests of American labor engaged in manufacture should be carefully considered, as well as the preservation of our manufacturers. It may be called protection, or by any other name, but relief from the hardships and dangers of our present tariff laws should be devised with especial precaution against imperiling the existence of our manufacturing interests.

Is it in wise, conservative statements like these, guarding the interests of American manufacturers on one hand, while seeking to relieve the people on the other, that the doctrines of free trade are so plentifully found? Or is the mythical monster, free trade, discovered lurking in the following splendid paragraph, enunciated by the President in a tone worthy the best statesmanship in the history of the Republic:

Our progress toward a wise conclusion will not be improved by dwelling upon the theories of protection and free trade. This savors too much of bandying epithets. It is a condition which confronts us—not a theory. Relief from this condition may involve a slight reduction of the advantages which we award our home productions, but the entire withdrawal of such advantages should not be contemplated. The question of free trade is absolutely irrelevant; and the persistent claim made in certain quarters, that all efforts to relieve the people from unjust and unnecessary taxation are schemes of so-called free-traders, is mischievous and far removed from any consideration for the public good.

The simple and plain duty which we owe the people is to reduce taxation to the necessary expenses of an economical operation of the Government, and to restore to the business of the country the money which we hold in the Treasury through the perversion of governmental powers. These things can and should be done with safety to our industries, without danger to the opportunity for remunerative labor which our workingmen need, and with benefit to them and all our people, by cheapening their means of subsistence and increasing the measure of their comforts.

Sir, does it not seem that those who cavil with Mr. Cleveland and denounce his views on tariff taxation are such as have predetermined a quarrel and would not approve the Declaration of American Independence if it came from his hand? Such political leaders may have their uses, but in the present instance it requires no gift of prophecy to foresee that as blind leaders of the blind they and their followers will roll in the ditch of defeat together.

But a persistent and violent effort is also being made by those who manage and lead the opposition to the present Administration to convince the public mind that the President is unfriendly to labor interests and labor organizations, and that the reduction of taxes which he so powerfully enforces would prove hurtful to the workingmen and workingwomen of the country, and especially to wage-laborers employed in our manufacturing industries. I might here pause to ask the meaning of the present condition of the wage-workers in many of the most extensive manufacturing regions; why, under the present high tariff, they are engaged in constant strikes and severe struggles with their employers for more pay, if it is true that the employer always pays his hired labor in proportion to the rate of duty levied to protect his manufactured products.

I will go far to protect the American laborer in every respect and to comfort his daily life with generous laws. My heart is full of appreciative sympathy for him and his household as they gather around their troubled fireside, often in penury, sometimes in actual want, and never in ease or affluence, but I have never yet conceived it a remedy for his privations and anxieties to increase the tax on his blankets and bedclothing, or on his salt and meager tableware, while his employer, for whose profit such taxes are paid, is left wholly free to fix his wages, reduce them to the starvation point, or deprive him of work altogether. If the laborer is compelled to pay taxes on all he and his family consume for the benefit of his powerful employer, it would seem but just that the employer should also be compelled to give work to the laborer at wages sufficient to support in comfort him, his wife, and his children.

The President expresses his solicitude for the welfare of the American laborer and points out the vigilant care his interests should receive in the treatment of the tariff in the following terms:

It is also said that the increase in the price of domestic manufactures resulting from the present tariff is necessary in order that higher wages may be paid to our workingmen employed in manufactures than are paid for what is called the pauper labor of Europe. All will acknowledge the force of an argument which involves the welfare and liberal compensation of our laboring people. Our labor is honorable in the eyes of every American citizen; and as it lies at the foundation of our development and progress, it is entitled, without affectation or hypocrisy, to the utmost regard. The standard of our laborers' life should not be measured by that of any other country less favored, and they are entitled to their full share of all our advantages.

* * * * * * *

But the reduction of taxation demanded should be so measured as not to necessitate or justify either the loss of employment by the workingman nor the lessening of his wages; and the profits still remaining to the manufacturer, after a necessary readjustment, should furnish no excuse for the sacrifice of the interests of his employés either in their opportunity to work or in the diminution of their compensation. Nor can the worker in manufactures fail to understand that while a high tariff is claimed to be necessary to allow the payment of remunerative wages, it certainly results in a very large increase in the price of nearly all sorts of manufactures, which, in almost countless forms, he needs for the use of himself and his family. He receives at the desk of his employer his wages, and perhaps before he reaches his home, is obliged, in a purchase for family use of an article which embraces his own labor, to return in the payment of the increase in price which the tariff permits, the hard-earned compensation of many days of toil.

Sir, I have thus particularly, and in detail, dwelt upon the message of the President, and submitted his views on disputed points as stated by himself, in order to present a complete refutation, in a condensed form, of the reckless and sometimes malicious misrepresentations with which his positions have already been assailed, and which are certain to continue at least ten months longer. In my judgment, however, the American people will have but small difficulty, as soon as the present improvised commotion has subsided, in determining that his premises, his arguments, and his conclusions are alike impregnable, and alike defy assault. In fact, it was suggested to me a few days ago by a keen and able observer of men and affairs that those most conspicuous at this time in seeking to make a political issue on this subject against the President had failed to convince themselves, but were simply playing a compulsory part, masquerading, as it were, in theatrical costumes, under the sore and humiliating stress of a partisan political necessity.

It would indeed seem strange that intelligent and cultivated thinkers could candidly conclude, under all the circumstances of trade, labor, and general business in this country at the present time, that a dead surplus piled mountain high in the Treasury is a blessing, and that taxes on the common wants and necessities of life should not be diminished, even though it be done without the slightest injustice to the manufacturer and with as much protection as possible to employed labor. It is not for me to impugn the sincerity of our adversaries, but when experienced Republican leaders assume an air of extreme confidence over such an issue as this; when clubs and caucuses and club conventions are called together in spasmodic haste, and proceed to inflate themselves with a sort of hysterical enthusiasm over the opportunity given them by the President to attack principles as old, as true, and as necessary to liberty as any embodied in our Declaration of Independence, it would not, I think, be wonderful, in view of such conduct, if the plain, common-sense people of the country should regard such demonstrations as merely sound and fury, signifying nothing more than a noisy effort to sustain their political courage in the face of certain and overwhelming defeat.

But there is another feature of controversy over the question of the tariff and its present condition which involves the responsibility of parties and to a certain extent of individuals for the delay which has occurred in legislative action. For the first ten years after the war closed the Republican party had complete control of every department of the Government, and for the next six years the Democratic party had a majority in the House of Representatives. During these sixteen years no concerted effort was made for a general revision of the tariff. The expenses of the Government were very great, and whenever a surplus occurred in the Treasury after they were defrayed it was readily returned to circulation by the payment of bonds then falling due and payable. In this way the evils of surplus revenue arising from high taxation did not manifest themselves nor call for redress with the same imperative force they do now. It is true that tariff reform was from time to time urgently demanded by the agricultural and commercial interests of the country, and that tariff taxes were excessive; but the subject was not taken up for definite action until the Forty-seventh Congress convened.

The Republican party had secured a majority in both branches of that Congress and also held the executive department. The bill brought forward by skillful Republican leaders, and which became a law on the 3d day of March, 1883, was designed to appease the popular demand for a revision of the war tariff, or as it is most generally known, the Morrill tariff, and at the same time to touch it as lightly and tenderly as possible. As a member of the Finance Committee of this body I lent my efforts towards shaping that measure so as to reduce taxation and promote the best interests of the whole country; but it all the time appeared more a show than a substance, more a pretense of doing a thing than the actual accomplishment of it. Subsequent experience has demonstrated that the impressions under which I voted against this measure were correct. Instead of reducing our revenues from customs duties they have largely increased under its insidious operation.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, the revenues collected from that source were $192,905,023.44; for the succeeding year, ending June 30, 1887, they were $217,286,893.13, an increase of $24,381,869.69, while for the present fiscal year, ending June 30, 1888, the duties on imports already actually received, and those estimated for by the Secretary of the Treasury, will reach $228,000,000, being still another increase of $10,715,106.87, in tariff taxation. And alongside of this increase of tax tyranny and overplus oppression, a monopoly of the wealth of the country, in the hands of favored classes, has, with equal pace, also increased, while the condition of labor appears to be not only without protection, but to grow more and more insecure and deplorable every day. A so-called revision of the tariff, producing such results as these, was either a deliberate deception or a huge blunder, and not in any respect what was due to the interests and the expectations of the American people.

In fact the authors themselves of the tariff act of March, 1883, seem to have had but little faith that it would long impose on the credulity of the country. Although the time of nearly an entire Congress had been taken in its consideration, and although its passage was at the time hailed for party purposes as a brilliant triumph of economic statesmanship, yet in the brief space of only fifteen months, at Chicago, June 3, 1884, in the national Republican convention, it was found necessary to put forth a new party promise, as follows:

The Republican party pledges itself to correct the irregularities of the tariff, and to reduce the surplus, not by the vicious and indiscriminating process of horizontal reduction, but by such methods as will relieve the tax-payer without injuring the laborer or the great productive interests of the country.

Here was a plain, clear admission, made three years and a half ago, that their work of little more than a year before had been poorly done,

Sir, I am tempted to submit what the Secretary styles a "bit of history," as stated in his report, and which he aptly suggests "will and called for correction; that it had not prevented the accumulation of a surplus, nor brought relief to the tax-payer, and this admission was accompanied by a solemn pledge that the Republican party would do its work over again, correct the irregularities it had committed, reduce the surplus in the Treasury, and lift unnecessary burdens from oppressed labor. I repeat, that this distinct and positive pledge was given to the country three years and a half ago, and yet, never by one word, one vote, one step, or the lifting of its finger, has the Republican party, from that day to this, made a single attempt for its fulfillment. On the contrary, the leaders of that party have not only done nothing themselves to remedy their own confessed wrongdoing, but they have, with the whole weight of their organization, hindered the efforts of everybody else.

Mr. TELLER rose.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the Senator desire to speak on this question?

If I am reminded at this point that a small minority of Democratic Representatives in the House, while waiting for the practical workings of the recently-enacted law of March, 1883, voted against further tariff legislation for the time being, my answer will not be an assault on them, their motives, or their party loyalty. Their action was taken according to their best enlightened sense of duty to those whom they represented. With additional light, however, now on the subject in all its branches and details, those who hope that Democratic counsels will fail to reach a harmonious conclusion will be left to nurse their disappointments before the present session of Congress adjourns.

But what shall be said for a party which, fully realizing its sins and shortcomings, casts its whole force, under caucus discipline, against every movement of relief and reform which it confesses is necessary to the public welfare? This was conspicuously true of the Republican party in both the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses; and now in the Fiftieth Congress its boldest and ablest leaders appear terrified and enraged at being compelled to face the same great issue, which they pledged their readiness to meet in 1884, but which they have succeeded in avoiding ever since. It will not do for them to prate about "the vicious and indiscriminating process of horizontal reduction." The field has been open all the time for measures to be introduced by themselves, and their consideration could have been at once secured, had such been the policy of the party.

Various State conventions of that party also have echoed from time to time the confession and the pledge of reformation given in its national assemblage at Chicago. I recall the fact that this was done in Indiana, and yet I know of no leader of the Republican party in Congress from that great and prolific State who has signalized himself in the slightest attempt to reform the abuses or even to disturb in the minutest particular the admitted irregularity and injustice of the tariff as it now stands. The same thing can be said of Iowa, Kansas, Illinois, and many other powerful Commonwealths of the West and Northwest; but with all their talent and eloquence on this floor and in the other branch of Congress no sound, not even a whisper, has ever been heard from them urging the fulfillment of the broken pledge of 1884. And if now, after this long delay, the leaders of the Republican organization here in Congress and elsewhere assume the attitude of tariff reformers, such as they promised to become at Chicago, it will only be under compulsion, the compulsion of public opinion, invoked and aroused by the powerful statement and appeal of Mr. Cleveland in his message a month ago.

They are chiefly incensed against the President because he has disturbed their policy of inaction, concealed, as they conceived it to be, by timely promises and pledges which were never intended to be kept. Their anger is kindled because their dilatory tactics, like a lawyer's for the benefit of his client based on affidavits for a continuance, and promises to go to trial at the next term of court, can avail them no longer. The President has served notice on them, and all concerned, that a further violation of these promises will not be condoned by the people who demand, and have a right to demand action, action by the present session of the present Congress. He calls them to their duty, and arraigns them in the following strong and patriotic language:

> The question thus imperatively presented for solution should be approached in a spirit higher than partisanship and considered in the light of that regard for patriotic duty which should characterize the action of those intrusted with the weal of a confiding people. But the obligation to declared party policy and principle is not wanting to urge prompt and effective action. Both of the great political parties now represented in the Government have, by repeated and authoritative declarations, condemned the condition of our laws which permits the collection from the people of unnecessary revenue, and have, in the most solemn manner, promised its correction; and neither as citizens or partisans are our countrymen in a mood to condone the deliberate violation of these pledges.

But while determining that for the future no useless surplus of the people's money shall be gathered into the Treasury, and while devising the best means to attain that end, the question constantly arises, and with great force, as to the proper disposition of the surplus already there, and which will be vastly increased before this unnatural current, now flowing so strongly in the wrong direction, can be stopped by legislation. The plain people have caught up this question and are asking at every opportunity what is to be done with the overplus of their money which remains after every authorized and legitimate expenditure has been made. It presents a puzzle to their minds as it does also to minds long engaged in the transaction of public affairs.

The statesmen of Europe have looked with amazement at the report of the Secretary of the American Treasury as well as at the message of the Executive. In these great state papers they behold in cold, undeniable figures the wonder and the marvel of nations. A government with every debt paid which is due, and which presents an option to the authorities to pay; a government meeting to the hour the interest on its bonds not yet payable, and in certain instances purchasing such bonds themselves at a premium for its sinking fund; also meeting with the same promptitude its magnificent pension pay-roll; liquidating every item of public expense and yet showing in its treasury an overplus at the end of the present fiscal year of $140,000,000, without disturbance or revolution on the part of its overtaxed citizens, is indeed a spectacle without a parallel in the history of the human race.

Looking merely at its imposing surface it is well calculated, for the moment, to swell the American heart with pride at the inexhaustible resources of his country and the law-abiding patriotism of his countrymen. But the dazzling and alluring picture will not bear scrutiny, nor be approved by sound principles nor sober after-thought. When the Earl of Cardigan, in his uniform of scarlet and gold, led the Light Brigade, "The noble six hundred," down the North Valley at Balaklava, charging the whole Russian army, and riding into "the jaws of death, into the gates of hell," General Bosquet of the French forces, looking on from a distant height, exclaimed, "It is magnificent, but it is not war." And so may thoughtful observers of the tremendous financial power and endurance of the American people exclaim, "It is glorious, but it is not statesmanship." It is glorious to the manhood and resources of the Republic, but in giving the orders, in shaping the policy, on which the American people have been thus strained, taxed, and bitterly tested, all the world now knows that a blunder, equivalent to a crime, has been committed, and stubbornly persisted in. But the question still recurs in its homely, practical way as to the disposal of the results of this blundering policy.

Sir, I have observed with such care as I have been able the numerous suggestions which have been made for the use of the surplus revenue now on hand. It is far easier to point out the objects to which, in my judgment, it ought not to be applied, than it is, perhaps, to indicate where it should be. I am not a disciple of a standing army, nor of a standing navy. I believe in the necessity of neither the one nor the other. Troops should be maintained on our frontiers in sufficient numbers to prevent, as far as possible, the white man from taking the homes and everything else belonging to the Indians, and then in turn to prevent the Indians from indulging in retaliatory murders. To these should be added a few more to raise the flag at sunrise in our forts, and to fire the evening gun at sunset. As to actual preparations for war the American people have shown that they are always ready.

A very earnest and very loud appeal, however, has for some time past been made from certain quarters for the construction of a powerful navy. Our pride in great fleets and in mighty naval armaments, with which to parade and show before the nations of the earth, has been eloquently invoked on many occasions, and when that glowing theme has seemed insufficient to move the country we have been passionately reminded of the perils of impending war unless we build and cover the seas with ships. What proportion of this argument, if it may be so called, is due to sincere conviction, and how much of it is due to the ship-yards, ship-builders, and thrifty contractors whose palms itch to handle the millions in the Treasury, it would be impossible to determine. It has failed, however, to convince me that a standing navy is any more necessary than a standing army. The nations of the earth need no visible sign of our greatness in the shape of American squadrons on their coasts, nor do they need any other reminder than American history that their own safety, far more than ours, requires them to pursue with us the arts of peace rather than the arts of war.

It is now seventy-two years since the close of the only war this Government ever had with a European power, excepting the war for its independence; and in the strong and increasing light of a Christian civilization, calling for the peaceful methods of arbitration instead of the sword, and especially owing to the grand isolation of our geographical position, and our freedom from contact with powerful neighbors, it is reasonable to believe that a hundred years more will come and go without the sound of a hostile gun aimed at the American flag in any of the four quarters of the globe. If, however, the emergency of war should ever rise, no comments from me are necessary, in the light of our glorious military and naval history, to show the manner in which it would be met by the spontaneous patriotism, courage, energy, and inventive genius of the entire country, in all its sections and in every State.

With the exception, therefore, of five or six steel cruisers perhaps, to patrol the oceans and exchange official courtesies with foreign powers, the American people should not be required to spend their money at this time on maritime vessels. Nor would a glance at the history of the Navy since the close of the war encourage the attempt to build up a standing navy, unless an absolute assurance could be given, a bond executed by Fate itself, that such an administration of its affairs as marked many portions of that long period could never occur again. In his recent annual report the Secretary of the Navy very correctly says:

> It is often the subject of wonder what has become of the $70,000,000 spent upon war vessels since the close of the war, in view of the fact that there is now no navy.

Sir, I am tempted to submit what the Secretary styles a "bit of history," as stated in his report, and which he aptly suggests "will serve as an illustration" on this point. It reads as follows:

Among the vessels dropped from the Navy Register and sold during the past year is the Tennessee.

The account of the sale is stated elsewhere.

The history of this vessel is quite interesting and most illustrative. She had a short life, but as a consumer of money a brilliant one. Her hull was built and she was equipped in the New York navy-yard. Her machinery was designed and built under contract by the eminent engineer, Mr. John Ericsson, costing $700,000. Her total original cost was $1,856,075.81. Upon her trial trip, in January, 1867, she ran about 1,000 miles. She attained a speed of 16 knots and made a run of 15 knots per hour for four hours. She encountered a perilous storm, described as a hurricane, which continued over twenty-four hours. The ship suffered considerably. The report of her commander says:

"The engines moved off finely and worked perfectly during all the storm * * * her machinery is as perfect as it need to be. It has undergone the severest test and not once found wanting. She is the fastest ship I have ever seen."

The chief engineer says:

"If the strength and workmanship of the machinery can not be depended upon, then no reliance is to be placed upon the performance of any steam machinery with which I am acquainted."

Two years afterwards she underwent what was called "repairs," and the sum of $576,799.61 was spent upon her; all but $73,000 of this was put on her hull and equipment. It was the full price of a new wooden hull of her size at that time. This was from 1869 to 1871. She then made a cruise of three months and went into the hands of Mr. John Roach to enable him to take out the machinery and boilers of John Ericsson and substitute others of superior character. It was among other things expected to give the ship a 14½-knot speed for twenty-four hours. When she had her trial of this new machinery in 1875 her maximum speed was 10¾ knots, and she had had put upon her an expense of $801,713.60 in addition to the value of her machinery and boilers taken in trade by Mr. Roach at $95,000. This machinery had cost $700,000; had not been in actual service six months; had never been surveyed and condemned by a board of Government officers, nor its value fixed by any Government board, but it was sold to Mr. Roach as old iron.

That is to say, between 1869 and 1875 the Tennessee had had three months' service and had cost in repairs and improvements $1,443,513.21.

This was largely in excess of a fair price for a new ship of her characteristics.

Twelve years after (on April 4, 1887) she is condemned by the Statutory Board as unseaworthy and not worth repairing, and ordered sold, having had put upon her between 1875 and 1887 the additional sum of $577,716.17. She brought $34,525 at the auction sale. She had cost the Government $3,800,000 in round numbers, and had done about ten years of active service, outside of repair shops and navy-yards.

Sir, the views I have thus advanced on the subject of the Navy also express my position in regard to a general system of coast defenses, and the vast expenditures, and dangerous influences therein implied. I turn to more natural, necessary, and practical methods for the use of our surplus revenues. A generous pension-roll with all arrearages paid; liberal appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors, the great waterways for cheap transportation, and the only successful competitors of the railroads; the construction of public buildings wherever needed for the public service; all these objects are laudable, and should be attained, but they will fall far short of restoring our immense surplus to circulation, and of affording the relief needed.

As a further remedy, and indeed the greatest and most potent, the American people will be best pleased to see their public debt diminished, and if the authority to purchase bonds not yet due is not to be found in existing law, let Congress promptly supply the defect. I notice with great interest the suggestions made by the able and accomplished Secretary of the Treasury on the use to be made of the surplus. He says:

One use which can be made of this money is to diminish taxation to such an extent that the annual revenues will be less for some years to come than the appropriations; thus the accumulated surplus would be used for ordinary expenses and the people would gain the greatest possible good from it. Doubtless by the time this money was spent in pursuance of this plan, the revenues would have so increased as to be equal to proper annual expenses. Experience teaches that this would probably be the case. In the mean time a portion of this money could lie in banks, where it would be available for the business of the country, and, as upon withdrawal from them it would be at once returned to the channels of business through Government payments, no shock would be caused by such withdrawal. As this is the best use to make of this money, I advise it. If, however, it is thought better to attempt to buy bonds with it, specific authority should be given to the Secretary of the Treasury to do so.

With the greatest respect for the opinion of the Secretary, my judgment prefers the alternative he presents in the last sentence of this extract rather than the more specific recommendation which precedes it. The people know their money is well applied when it is redeeming them from the clutches of debt. If bonds have to be purchased at a premium, equal, or something more than equal, to the accruing interest saved by their prepayment before due, still the country will hail its gradual emancipation, even at such a sacrifice.

There is no bondage so cruel as the bondage of debt, and when our last Government bond is paid, and the last vestige of our national debt is wiped out, there will be a jubilee year in this great land beside whose glories all other jubilees and centennial years will grow pale and insignificant. With equal and exact justice to all our people, and with special privileges to none, and with rigid economy in every branch of the public service, that glad year will approach swiftly and surely. Sir, I have faith in its coming, because the administration of the Government has at last been placed upon sound principles, carried out by honest, able hands, and the American people will see to it in their own way that no backward step shall be taken for the future.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before that is done, I ask that the message may be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. TELLER rose.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the Senator desire to speak on this question?

Mr. TELLER. A few words.

Mr. SHERMAN. I withdraw the request for action on the pending resolution.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not intend at this late hour to discuss either the tariff or the general financial question in which the country is interested.

The Senator who has just taken his seat took occasion in very handsome terms, to which I take no exception, to refer to some remarks I made the other day. I am under obligations to him for the magnificent advertisement and eulogy that he rendered on the State I have the honor in part to represent. He will thereby increase the great number of friends he has in that State, and I certainly feel under personal obligations to him.

I did remark the other day that the President of the United States had said we were confronted with a great emergency, and that, in my judgment, a surplus of $55,000,000 was not an emergency which ought to frighten any administration, much less this one. I complained then, as Senators on the other side of the Chamber had complained, that the Administration had allowed for months the money to accumulate in the Treasury without paying bonded debts that were due and drawing interest.

I learn from an official source which can not be questioned that when the first call was made by this Administration for the redemption of bonds in payment of the public debt, which had been due and were due when this Administration came into power, the surplus had accumulated in the Treasury to the extent of $83,236,898.73. Over $83,000,000 had accumulated before this Administration saw fit to call in a single dollar of the indebtedness then due.

I find a statement here, derived from the published reports of this Administration, that in August, 1885, long before any bonds were called, there were in the Treasury, exclusive of subsidiary coin or unavailable assets, $49,716,000, which could have been applied. The next month the amount was $63,903,106, or nearly $64,000,000; and that was not considered a startling thing. No money was paid out; no bonds were called; no pretense was made that the business of the country was being disturbed, or that it was likely to be disturbed.

I find that in October, 1885, there were $66,818,292 in the Treasury. I find that in November, 1885, there were $61,930,595, and the last of December, 1885, before a bond had been called, there were $71,018,872, or nearly $16,000,000 more than the amount of surplus in the Treasury when the President of the United States sent his startling message to this and the other House.

As I have said, when this Administration made the first call for bonds there was a surplus of $83,236,898.73 in the Treasury. It was said here the other day that on several occasions before they made the call there had been a much greater surplus in the Treasury than there was when this message came to the Senate. I stated then that it was not the amount of money which brought this message; it was not because the Administration were frightened at the surplus and the accumulations; for they knew that there was a method by which they could reduce the surplus, and they had exercised that method to the extent of $27,000,000, if the Treasurer is correctly reported in the message of the President of the United States.

I know it was said on the other side of the Chamber that there was some question whether the surplus could be paid out; but I submit that when an administration have availed themselves of a law to the extent of paying $27,000,000 of the public money at the demand of Wall street—for there is where the demand came from, and but for that demand I do not suppose it would have been paid—they might pay out the $55,000,000 that they have, in the interest of the suffering multitude, if the whole people are suffering as it is now stated they are.

The President speaks of the condition which confronts us. What is the condition? That there is too much money in the Treasury; that it is coming in; and that there is no method by which it can be paid out. Sir, the President knew that when the next appropriation bills come in they must reduce the apparent surplus very largely. The President knew that the deficiency of last year and the deficiency of this year must come in. He knew that there must be a river and harbor bill of some amount; and he knew, what was a foregone conclusion, that the bill which is now before the Senate to be acted upon would take at least $7,000,000 out of the Treasury for the coming year. He speaks of $140,000,000, which he says may come into the Treasury, although it is quite possible that amount may not come; but he ought to know that if it does come, there are $48,000,000, or nearly that amount, to be paid out for the sinking fund. So he was just within a little of the amount they had in the Treasury before they saw fit to call a single bond. They had $83,000,000 before they called any bonds, and then did not call them until they were arraigned by the Democratic side of this body in a speech which has had no equal in any arraignment of the present Administration from this side. Words were uttered from that side of the Chamber, with reference to the conduct of Democratic officials, which have never been equaled in severity on this side of the Chamber. It was then, and then only, that they yielded to what they knew was the sentiment of the legislative body and the sentiment of the people all over the country, and called for bonds which had been due and drawing interest eleven months before they made the call, with sufficient money in the Treasury to have paid, if it had been properly expended, I say, the entire debt within reach in six months after the Administration came in.

Be that as it may, they can not deny that on several occasions during the season they had more surplus than they have now. They can not deny that they had $194,000,000 drawing interest at the rate of nearly $6,000,000 a year, which they did not see fit to pay, but they added that to the public burdens which the people bear in paying off this great debt. And now we are told that with $55,000,000 of surplus, such is the condition that confronts us, that it is alarming. I deny it. I deny that any man who has studied the finances of the country a day, and who understands the changes which may happen, can regard it as alarming. While the revenue ran up this year $34,000,000 beyond expectations, it was because $22,000,000 was paid into the Treasury as duties on excessive imports, brought about by the prosperity of the country. That any man who knows anything about the condition of the country knows.

Next year may bring adversity and hard times, and then the $22,000,000 will not be received. Then every man who knows anything about the subject knows that the $3,000,000 paid for public lands last year will not be paid when the pinching hand of adversity is upon the people. So I say it is not wisdom, it is not good business for us, with $230,000,000 due in four years, and with the interest on it to be paid every year, to go on now and reduce the revenues to the bare expenses of the Government.

We have had two speeches on this subject from the other side of the Chamber, and neither of the gentlemen has proceeded, any more than the President did, to show how it is proposed to reduce the revenue. Is it to be $50,000,000? Is it to be $100,000,000? On what do you mean to reduce it?

We are met with glittering generalities that there is a burden on the people, and it is to be reduced. I deny it. Here is the great body that represents the people of the United States; the other Chamber represents them more directly, and is charged with this very question, but it has not seen fit to move in it. Why? Because the people nowhere in this great country at any time have demanded that the taxes should be reduced at the expense of the continuation of the public debt, as this policy means. The people everywhere, where they have been heard from on this question, in conventions, in chambers of commerce, in legislative assemblies, at the polls, and everywhere, have said, "It is a fundamental doctrine of the American people, irrespective of politics, that the public debt shall be paid." Two hundred and thirty million dollars is due four years from now. How do Senators who sustain the President propose to pay it? If they reduce the revenue now to current expenses, how is it to be paid? Do they wish to be put with those who are in favor of a refunding of the debt? Do they want to continue taxes upon the people to keep up the debt? They must do that or they must raise revenue beyond the current expenses so as to be sure and certain that when the debt comes due we shall have the money wherewith to pay it.

I said on a former occasion that this was not an honest scare in the executive department. I said there was no fright there any more than there was here, nor any more than there is with the people; and I repeat again, having proper respect for a co-ordinate branch of the Government, it was for the purpose of bringing the opinion of this body and the other of the legislative department of the country, by misrepresentations and untruthful statements, to the opinion of the Executive that the country would be benefited by a reduction of the tariff; in other words, that the great industrial interests of this country should be disturbed, whether the judgment of the people willed it or not, for fear of an accumulation of large sums of money in the Treasury of the United States, at the expense and to the detriment of the general business of the country.

There is nothing to-day, and there has not been anything at any time in the last year, that would justify such a message. Last year when the regular message came to Congress it dealt with another subject largely. Many pages were devoted to the question of silver, and a few pages were devoted to the questions of civil-service and revenue reform. Then the silver question was the great emergency that confronted the executive department, as it had been the year before, when three-fourths of the whole country differed from the executive department on that silver question. Now the emergency is because of $55,000,000 in the Treasury, of which $27,000,000 is an accident and uncertain in character.

A Senator asks me what was the cause of the emergency of last year. I have stated what was the emergency then, but no one in this body or elsewhere paid any attention to it. In the history of the world an executive officer of so great a people never uttered anything that fell with so little weight upon a people as the utterances of the executive department on that silver question. Nobody took fright; business in this country went on prospering and increasing. There was progress such as had not been heard of before. We coined far more silver this year than we had ever coined before, coining 34,000,000 silver dollars against 24,000,000 the year before, and we have built 13,000 miles of railroad and we put into them $325,000,000.

There is not anything in the history of this country like it. No such number of miles of railroad have ever been built in any other year. More money has been expended for railroads, for manufactures, and for all other things that go to make people happy and comfortable; and yet we are told that this system which we have built up, which has made us great and prosperous as no other nation in the world has grown and prospered, is iniquitous, illogical, and wicked, and that if we do not immediately, at the behest of the executive department, destroy the system, disaster will come to the people.

Do you think the people believe it? Does anybody believe it? Do they believe it at the executive department? If they do they are afflicted to a degree never known in high circles before. I did ridicule it, and I did sneer at it perhaps, as was said by one great Democratic paper that I read. I thought it was beneath the dignity of the President of the United States to tell us that $55,000,000 in the Treasury was a threat, was a promise of disaster, when he had had $83,000,000 there, and when he had had $66,000,000 there, and when he had had $50,000,000 there at other times and never saw fit to pay out the money on the then payable debt of the nation; and I stated that I believed, as I do now, that it was in the interest of an attempt to destroy the great industrial enterprises of this country.

I said the other day, and I repeat now, that in my judgment this is the great question, whether the American laborer shall have compensation for his labor or whether he shall not. I do not myself regard it as a question of capital. I do not regard it as a question whether the manufacturers are to be properly compensated for the money they have invested. I regard it as a question between us and the laboring men of this country, and they will so look upon it; and the appeal that the President made to the manufacturers that when their tariff was reduced, when their income was lessened, as he said it would be, they should be generous to their employés, shows that he understood that the effect of a reduction of the tariff duties would be to reduce the laboring people's wages in this country.

I did not intend to discuss this question to-night, as I have said, because I propose on some occasion hereafter to discuss it at length. I simply wanted to say to Senators who think they can escape this question by saying it is a question of capital, and who think they can escape it by high-sounding words, by talking about wringing from the people taxes, by talking about the robbery of the people, that they are mistaken; they will not deceive anybody by such talk. The American people know that their prosperity is in a great degree the result of the productions of this continent that have given them varied industries and a multitude of employment fitted to the capacity of different classes, with different intelligences and different interests.

When a question came before the Senate some years since about excluding from this country a class of people who competed with our laborers, who came here without homes, without property, without families, and who contributed nothing to church, who contributed nothing to state, who contributed nothing to schools, who contributed nothing to the body-politic, but who lived on wages that the American laborer could not—when we said we will exclude them, the other side of the Chamber pretty generally voted for their exclusion upon the theory that they would not bring the American laborer in competition with the Asiatic laborer, on American soil, where he must wear to some extent American clothes, where he must eat American food; but now they would give him the opportunity in China to manufacture there and send the manufactured article over here.

I have been told by a Senator on the floor since this discussion commenced to-day that goods can be brought from China and landed on our coast for $10 a ton with a great profit to those who transport them, and it is proposed by this system of reduction of the tariff to allow the 450,000,000 Chinamen living upon wages that the poorest American in this country would starve upon, to compete with the American laborers in everything that they can manufacture, and they can manufacture everything that the cunning of man's brain or the skill of his hand can manufacture; and they are to be brought not to our doors, not where they would eat our grain and pork, but where they shall consume only the productions of their own country, and yet shall compete with ours.

I do not believe that such a measure will be a very practicable one in this body. I doubt very much whether a Democratic House will favor it, even at the risk of some disfavor at the White House; but if a Democratic House can be found that dares face the American laborer and open the ports of this country to the labor of the world to compete with American manufactures and American labor, I rely on this body to interpose a check. Neither do I believe that the people of this country are so ignorant and so unlearned that they do not know that if 2,000,000 of men who are engaged in manufactures receive a living from that work, all other classes of American citizens receive like benefit in a proportionate degree. They will not be satisfied that there is danger with $55,000,000 in the Treasury.

I only rose to put in the RECORD the proof, figures and facts that can not be gainsaid, that when the Administration announced that the $55,000,000 is a threat to the interests of the country, its own history shows that the announcement was unwarranted by its own history and entirely uncalled for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. CULLOM. There ought to be a brief executive session this evening, and I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BLAIR. Before that motion is put I should like to say that I shall press the consideration of the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the motion withdrawn?

Mr. CULLOM. Only to allow a statement to be made.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not propose to go on to-night, but I think the Senate will bear me witness that I have been giving way and giving way from before the holidays and since, and I am justified in asking that the consideration of the unfinished business shall be proceeded with to-morrow. I would suggest further that action be taken on the pending resolution to-night, as the Senator from Ohio suggested a few moments ago.

Mr. CULLOM. I think my motion is pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 5, 1888.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 4, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, December 22, 1887, was read and approved.

MEMBERS SWORN IN.

Mr. DUNN, of Arkansas, and Mr. HAUGEN, of Wisconsin, having appeared at the bar of the House, were duly qualified according to law.

THE HOUSE RESTAURANT.

Mr. PAYSON submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Rules:

RULE —.

The power of appointment, removal, and the regulation of all the privileges and duties of the keeper of the House restaurant, and all details connected therewith, is hereby vested in the Speaker of the House.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted, as follows:

To Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR, indefinitely.

To Mr. HAYDEN, by reason of a death in his family.

To Mr. GALLINGER, until Monday, the 9th, on account of important business.

To Mr. DOCKERY, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. KERR, by reason of sickness.

To Mr. BARNES.

INTRODUCTION AND REFERENCE OF BILLS.

Mr. MILLS. I am informed that the Chair is not ready to announce the standing committees of the House to-day, but will most likely do so to-morrow. I ask, therefore, unanimous consent that the States and Territories be called for the introduction of bills which can be presented to-day and can be prepared for reference to the committees by the clerks by the time the committees are announced.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that under this call only public bills and joint and concurrent resolutions of a public nature are in order. Resolutions for the establishment of post-roads, for the improvements of rivers, and all private bills go into the petition-box for reference.

Mr. HERBERT. Do I understand that a bill for the improvement of a river goes into the petition-box?

The SPEAKER. That has been the rule since 1879. The new rule of the House provides that all private bills shall be introduced in the same way.

VACATION OF PATENTS.

Mr. HERBERT introduced a bill (H. R. 1171) to provide a mode of vacating patents in certain cases; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

JURISDICTION OF CIRCUIT COURT COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. HERBERT also introduced a bill (H. R. 1172) to regulate the jurisdiction of circuit court commissioners; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. HERBERT also introduced a bill (H. R. 1173) to provide for the judicial ascertainment of claims against the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS.

Mr. HERBERT also introduced a bill (H. R. 1174) relating to compensation and duties of United States attorneys; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, and ordered to be printed.

REDUCTION OF DUTIES.

Mr. WHEELER introduced a bill (H. R. 1175) to provide for the reduction of duties in certain cases; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

COURTS OF APPEAL.

Mr. WHEELER also introduced a bill (H. R. 1176) to establish courts of appeal, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

LINE OF THE ARMY.

Mr. WHEELER also introduced a bill (H. R. 1177) to define the line of the Army and to increase its efficiency; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JURISDICTION OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. WHEELER also introduced a bill (H. R. 1178) to amend an act entitled "An act to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and to provide for the payment of certain judgments for quartermaster's stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

INVESTIGATION OF CLAIMS.

Mr. WHEELER also introduced a bill (H. R. 1179) to amend an act entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims against the Government;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. WHEELER also introduced a bill (H. R. 1180) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, and ordered to be printed.

PROOF OF LOYALTY.

Mr. WHEELER also introduced a bill (H. R. 1181) to dispense with proof of loyalty in certain cases; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

SURVIVORS OF THE INDIAN WARS.

Mr. WHEELER also introduced a bill (H. R. 1182) granting pensions to the survivors of the Indian wars from 1835 to 1842, who have attained the age of seventy years; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

DAVID'S ISLAND.

Mr. WHEELER also introduced a bill (H. R. 1183) to acquire a dock and landing opposite David's Island; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS ROCK CREEK, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. WHEELER also introduced a bill (H. R. 1184) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Rock Creek on the Woodley Lane road, in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

DAVID'S ISLAND.

Mr. WHEELER also introduced a bill (H. R. 1185) to acquire a dock and landing opposite David's Island; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

FREEDMAN'S BANK.

Mr. WHEELER also introduced a bill (H. R. 1186) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to ascertain the amount still due and unpaid to depositors in the Freedman's Bank; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SIGNAL STATIONS ON WEST INDIA ISLANDS.

Mr. WHEELER also introduced a bill (H. R. 1187) to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to establish signal stations on the West India Islands; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

COMMON SCHOOLS.

Mr. WHEELER also introduced a bill (H. R. 1188) to aid in the temporary support of common schools; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committtte on Education, and ordered to be printed.

TAX UPON COTTON.

Mr. WHEELER also introduced a bill (H. POSTAL SERVICE IN SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. VANDEVER also submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads:

Whereas increasing complaints of inadequate allowances made for the support of the postal service, coming from all prominent offices in Southern California, indicate that the people of that section are suffering a serious public grievance that is retarding the business of the community and occasioning much loss and inconvenience to individuals, as well as scandal to the management of the Post-Office Department; and

Whereas it is reasonable that the Government should, from an accumulating surplus in the public Treasury, provide speedy and effectual relief; and

Whereas the citizens in important cities in that section, at Los Angeles, at San Diego, at San Luis Obispo, at San Bernardino, at Pasadena, at Riverside, and at other offices, have been compelled to supplement by private subscription the allowances made by the Post-Office Department for the postal service, and in some instances to pay the rent of buildings in which the post-offices are kept, to pay necessary clerk-hire not furnished by the Government, to pay gas and water bills of the post-office in order that the public might have reasonable accommodation; and

Whereas the postmasters at San Luis Obispo, and at other offices, in order to keep their offices running for the accommodation of the public, have expended a large part of the salaries allowed to them by law in the hire of clerks and in the payment of expenses which it belonged to the Government to pay, but which the post-office officials refused to allow; and

Whereas the revenues of the offices have been constantly increasing, furnishing the Government a large excess of receipts over expenditures; and

Whereas long lines of persons may be seen at the delivery places of these offices at any hour of the day from morning until night, waiting their turn to receive mail matter; and

Whereas the inadequate force employed in these offices entails fourteen, fifteen, and sixteen hours per day of service on efficient and poorly-paid employés; and

Whereas it is authentically stated that at the San Diego post-office, when a newly appointed postmaster recently took possession of the office, he found a great accumulation of unassorted mail matter, composed chiefly of newspapers and magazines, encumbering the office as so much rubbish, and having no force to assort and distribute the same, he caused it to be loaded into wagons and hauled to the dump in the bay, and that in this way four wagon-loads of mail matter, as above described, were disposed of: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Post-Office Committee be instructed to inquire into this matter at its earliest convenience, and to report, with as little delay as possible, a measure of relief; and that to this end that committee be accorded the privilege of reporting at any time.

FORT BROWN MILITARY RESERVATION, TEXAS.

Mr. HOLMAN submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Whereas it appears by an act of March, 1885, the sum of $160,000 was appropriated to enable the Secretary of War to acquire a good and valid title for the United States to the Fort Brown reservation, Texas, and to pay and extinguish all claims for the use and occupation of said reservation, provided that no part of this sum should be paid until a complete title be vested in the United States;

Whereas it is alleged that disputes have arisen between the claimants as to their respective shares of this appropriation, and that the Secretary of War has not paid any part of said amount;

Whereas by an act of Congress passed in 1875 the sum of $25,000 was appropriated for the purchase of the grounds and payment of the said Fort Brown reservation; and in the report of General Sherman as to the sufficiency of said sum it is alleged that the payment of $160,000 therefor would be a fraud on the Government;

Whereas it is alleged that it will appear from the documentary evidence in the War Department, the Quartermaster-General's Office, also the evidence of officials now in Washington who have served at said post, likewise the testimony of other citizens which can be obtained, that the sum of $50,000 would be a large price to pay for said reservation, including rent for the use and occupation of the same: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to investigate the subject-matter herein named, with authority to send for persons and papers; also to inquire into and report as to what necessity exists, if any, for a military post at said point, and the cost to the United States of said post since 1865.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitted in compliance with section 8 of the act of Congress approved April 15, 1886, showing the proceedings of the commission for the construction of the Congressional Library building since January 31, 1887; which was referred to the Select Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library, and ordered to be printed.

FISH-CULTURAL STATION IN MISSOURI.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of December 21, 1887, a report in relation to the availability of the Ozark region, in Southeastern Missouri, for a fish-cultural station; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PLATT. I present the petition of Mrs. J. M. K. Riley and 129 other men and women, who are residents of the District of Columbia, praying for the passage of a bill prohibiting the manufacture, sale, and importation of all alcoholic beverages in the District of Columbia. This petition is indorsed by sundry delegates and members of the Evangelical Alliance. I wish to call the attention of the Committee on the District of Columbia to this and to other petitions which I understand are to follow.

The inhabitants of the District of Columbia are deprived of the right of suffrage, a strange anomaly in this land which boasts of universal suffrage. They can not vote; they can not in any way exercise the right of suffrage. There is no way in which they can express their sentiments as to whether they desire a prohibitory law in the District of Columbia except by petition to Congress. Therefore I ask that the petition of these citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for the protection of their homes, which are the safeguard of the Republic, against the sale of liquor, which is its great danger, may have careful consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PLATT. I present a similar petition of 87 citizens of the First, Second, and Third Congressional districts in Connecticut, and also a petition of 55 citizens of Washington Territory, praying for the same object. I move the reference of the petitions to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of citizens of New Philadelphia, Ohio, praying for the passage of a law granting increased pension to soldiers in the late war disabled by wounds resulting in deafness; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MITCHELL presented the petition of General John E. Ross and other citizens of Oregon, praying compensation for Indian depredations, and particularly for those audited by Commissioners George H. Ambrose, Indian agent, in 1854, Hon. L. F. Grover, late Senator, and Hon. A. C. Gibbs, late governor of Oregon; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Lane County, Oregon, praying for increased compensation to fourth-class postmasters; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. BLAIR. I present the petition of the Right Worthy Grand Lodge of Good Templars, representing 500,000 members, signed by their officers, praying for a national prohibitory constitutional amendment, in which they set forth, addressing their petition to the United States Senate and House of Representatives, as follows:

> The undersigned, citizens of the United States, respectfully and earnestly ask your honorable body, by an appropriate joint resolution, to adopt and propose to the several States an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified, will prohibit henceforth the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation, and sale of all alcoholic liquors, as a beverage, in the United States, and in every place subject to their jurisdiction.

As the petitioners set forth, this is an organization of 500,000, belonging to all parties and to all religious associations, representing every profession, every occupation, every interest in this broad land, save alone that to which the petition is opposed. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. I present a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Nashua, N. H., earnestly praying for the passage of the educational bill without delay, in the interest of sobriety and intelligent citizenship. I move that the petition lie on the table, as the bill is before the Senate as the unfinished business.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. I present a memorial addressed to Congress, remonstrating against the admission of Utah as a State so long as the local civil power of the Territory remains in the hands of the Mormon priesthood and the people evade or refuse obedience to the present laws of Congress against polygamy.

The memorial is from Holbrook, Mass., and is signed by a large number of citizens of that locality. I should have passed it to one of the Senators from Massachusetts if I had observed where it came from, but it came to me in a letter. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. I present the petition of John W. Redfield and others, praying legislation by Congress providing for the payment of Indian depredation claims in full as audited by the Secretary of the Interior, or that Congress give the United States courts jurisdiction to hear and determine such claims, or create a special court of claims to try them; and for the passage of Senate bill 1079, introduced by myself, making an appropriation for the payment of such claims. The petition is accompanied by an elaborate printed argument prepared by a citizen of Oregon having great familiarity with these claims, showing the justice of them and the duty of Congress to legislate concerning them. I have had occasion several times to call the attention of the Senate and of the Committee on Indian Affairs to this subject. I now move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR presented the memorial of I. J. Lansing and other citizens of the United States, remonstrating against the admission of Utah as a State so long as the local civil power remains in the hands of the Mormon priesthood and the people evade or refuse obedience to the present laws of Congress against polygamy; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented the petition of Phineas Buckley and other citizens of the United States, praying for the repeal of that provision of the pension laws which limits the time for making applications for pensions; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Frederick Fraley, president of the National Board of Trade, praying for the enactment of a general bankruptcy law; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Rev. J. W. Fulton and other citizens of the United States, praying for the enactment of a bill providing temporary aid for common schools, to be disbursed on the basis of illiteracy; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of John Linsley, of the parish of East Feliciana, Louisiana, and the petition of John M. Roberts, of Clinton, La., praying that a pension be allowed to John Linsley; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HISCOCK presented the petition of J. W. Meader and other citizens of Clinton County, New York, praying for the repeal of that provision of the pension laws which limits the time for making application for pensions; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DANIEL presented a petition of employés in the Norfolk (Va.) navy-yard, praying for the passage of a bill for the relief of per-diem employés who have continuously and faithfully served during the term of one year at the navy-yards and naval stations; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BUTLER presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Carolina, favoring the repeal of the 10 per cent. tax on the circulation of State banks; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of J. B. Suddath and other citizens of Merchant, S. C.; the petition of W. P. Baily and other citizens of Hattieville, S. C.; and the petition of R. D. Gamble and other citizens of Indiantown, S. C., praying that increased compensation be allowed fourth-class postmasters; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER presented the memorial of William Wheeler Hubbell, of Concord Depot, Va., remonstrating against the pleuropneumonia bill, and praying for proper legislation to prevent and cure the diseases of bovine animals; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CAMERON presented a resolution adopted by the Board of Trade of Chester, Pa., protesting against the continuance of the quarantine in its present location near that city, and recommending the establishment of a national system of quarantine; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. EVARTS presented a petition of citizens of Hempstead, N. Y., praying for the re-establishment of the old rates of postage on seeds, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Merchants' Exchange of Buffalo, N. Y., relative to certain suggestions of the Secretary of the Navy; which were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented the petition of Julius Lea Porter, late of Company K, Sixteenth Regiment New York Volunteers, praying that the time for filing claims for arrears of pensions be extended; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of E. J. Barker and other citizens of Crown Point, N. Y., praying that the time for filing claims for arrears of pensions be extended; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SAWYER presented the memorial of La Crosse Division, No. 61, Order of Railway Conductors, of La Crosse County, Wisconsin, praying that the bill for licensing railway conductors be not enacted into a law; which was referred to the Committee on Railroads.

He also presented a resolution of the West Superior Chamber of Commerce, in favor of constituting West Superior, Wis., an independent original port of entry; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 970) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for allotment of lands in severalty to the Indians residing upon the Umatilla reservation, in the State of Oregon, and granting patents therefor, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1885, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1095) to provide for the compulsory education of Indian children, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 928) in relation to marriage between white men and Indian women, reported it with amendments.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 1159) granting a pension to Alphonzo H. Melendy; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1160) to increase the pensions of soldiers, sailors, and marines who have been totally disabled; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1161) granting a pension to Mrs. Jeannie Stone, widow of General Charles P. Stone; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1162) for the relief of Susan E. Alger; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1163) for the relief of Edward Rice; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1164) to amend section 1225 of the Revised Statutes, concerning detail of Army officers to educational institutions, etc.; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HOAR. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BLAIR. Should it go to the Committee on Education and Labor?

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me, as it is solely in reference to instruction to be given by Army officers in educational institutions, that it should properly be considered by the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. COCKRELL. Such bills have always heretofore gone to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOAR. I had first marked it for reference to the Committee on Military Affairs, but I thought afterwards, as it related merely to this educational subject, it had better go to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the reference of the bill to the Committee on Education and Labor?

Mr. BLAIR. I suggest that it follow the usual course, unless the Senator from Massachusetts has a special wish in regard to the matter.

Mr. HOAR. I have no sort of choice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the reference of the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs? The Chair hears none, and it is so referred.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 1165) to provide for a world's exposition at the national capital in 1892, and thereafter a permanent exposition of the three Americas, in honor of the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Centennial of the Constitution and the Discovery of America.

Mr. HOAR. I ask that the bill may be printed in the RECORD. It is not very long and relates to a matter of very wide interest.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill to provide for a world's exposition at the national capital in 1892, and thereafter a permanent exposition of the three Americas, in honor of the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America.

Whereas the year 1892 will be the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America by Christopher Columbus; and

Whereas a becoming pride in American institutions, civilization, and progress requires that this great historical event be duly celebrated in a manner becoming the dignity, wealth, and grandeur of the western hemisphere: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That a world's exposition be held at the national capital in 1892, and thereafter a permanent exposition of the three Americas, under the joint auspices of the United States, the forty-six States and Territories, and the sixteen independent sister nations of the American continent.

SEC. 2. That the management of said exposition consist of a governmental board of twenty-one directors, seven to be appointed by the President of the United States, seven by the President of the United States Senate, and seven by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SEC. 3. That an advisory board of sixty-two members be, and the same is hereby, authorized, one to be appointed by the governor of each of the forty-six States and Territories, and one by the Executive of each of the sixteen independent American nations.

SEC. 4. That space for said world's exposition, and permanent exposition of the three Americas be assigned in some unoccupied governmental reservation in the city of Washington, as follows:

1. Space for a permanent State and Territorial building for a permanent exhibit of the representative history, resources, arts, and industries of the forty-six States and Territories of the United States, said space to be available whenever said States and Territories, or a majority thereof, shall make the necessary appropriations for the expense of said building and exhibit.

2. Space for a permanent three Americas building for a permanent exhibit of the history, antiquities, resources, arts, and industries of the fifteen Spanish American Republics, the Empire of Brazil, the Dominion of Canada, and the various colonies of North, Central, and South America, said space to be available whenever said nations and colonies, or a majority thereof, shall make the necessary appropriations for the expenses of said building and exhibit.

3. Space for a temporary building or buildings, for a temporary exhibit, between the 1st of May and the 31st of October, 1892, by all nations other than those of the American continent, and by the private exhibitors of all nations of the world, said space to be available whenever the necessary funds are provided for said buildings and the expenses of conducting said exhibit.

4. A suitable site for a statue of Christopher Columbus, said site to be available whenever the necessary funds are provided for the expenses of said statue.

SEC. 5. That space be assigned in some governmental reservation in the city of Washington for the following permanent governmental buildings, namely:

1. Space for the enlargement of the present National Museum into a continental or three Americas museum, said space to be available whenever the necessary funds are provided for said purpose.

2. Space for a permanent building, under the control of the Interior Department, for the exhibit of working models of important American inventions, said space to be available whenever the necessary funds are provided for said purpose.

SEC. 6. That the President of the United States is authorized to invite the several States and Territories of the United States and the several sister nations of the three Americas to appoint their respective members to the advisory board, and to participate in said exposition in the manner heretofore provided.

SEC. 7. That whenever the necessary funds are provided for the said temporary exhibit during 1892 the President of the United States is authorized to invite all foreign nations, other than those of the American continent, to participate in said exposition.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1208) for the relief of John W. Redfield; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. DANIEL (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1209) for the relief of Robert N. Blake; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1210) providing for the payment of $2,500 to Theophilu Fisk Mills for executing a model and design for an equestrian statue of the late General John A. Rawlins; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1211) for the completion of the monument to Mary, the mother of Washington, at Fredericksburgh, Va.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 1212) for the relief of the heirs of William Pitcher and Axel Hayford, and Samuel Otis and George B. Fergusson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1213) for the relief of the owners and officers of the brig Olive Frances, and others on board said brig; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 1214) to pay to Julia A. Rice, Jennie M. Daisley, and William D. Daisley $5,000; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PUGH introduced a bill (S. 1215) in relation to the district courts of Alabama and the judges of said courts; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. EVARTS introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 25) providing for the printing of 4,500 copies of "Finley's Storm-Track Charts of the North Atlantic Ocean;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. VOORHEES introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 26) to arbitrate and settle the questions at issue between the District of Columbia and Samuel Strong; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ALIEN OWNERSHIP OF REAL ESTATE.

Mr. SHERMAN. If there is no further morning business, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a bill for the passage of which there is immediate call. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1029) to amend an act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens, etc., approved March 3, 1887.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. PLUMB. I hope that bill will not be called up this morning. We had the subject before the Committee on Public Lands at the last Congress——

Mr. SHERMAN. This bill only affects the question so far as to enable representatives of foreign governments to acquire property——

Mr. PLUMB. I understand, I suppose, what the special scope of the bill is, although I have not seen it.

Mr. SHERMAN. It confines——

Mr. PLUMB. I shall not consent that the bill may go through now. I want time to examine it for the purpose of suggesting amendments.

Mr. SHERMAN. If when the bill is taken up the Senator really desires further time, I will agree that it may go over.

Mr. PLUMB. I object to its being taken up at all now. The Committee on Public Lands have had consideration of the whole question, and very likely there will be some suggestions to come from that committee in regard to amendment. This bill was introduced in the Senate and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and apparently without much consideration it came back here, and while I do not say it ought not to pass in some form, I am very well satisfied that there ought to be some restrictions cast around the exercise of the power. I want time to examine it and I want time to give further consideration to the general question. There is no great hurry about it. I do not think anybody is aching to buy any land in Washington or outside, and I think we might take up some matters which are of more concern to the people of the United States and of more profit to people outside, who perhaps suffer more.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it due to the Committee on Foreign Relations——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would remind Senators that the motion under the rules is not debatable. If there be no objection, the Senator from Ohio will be allowed to proceed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I simply wish to state that there is no great hurry about this matter, except that the Secretary of State, in a letter printed, and which has lain on our tables for some time, has called attention to the importance of the immediate passage of the bill, on the ground that one or two representatives of foreign nations desire to make improvements here for the purpose of legations. There are several legation buildings in this city erected by foreign governments, all of which are known to Senators, and the only object of the bill is to enable those legations to make improvements, and, besides that, to exempt the District of Columbia from the operation of the act. I am very much in favor of the general act which prevents foreign owners from gaining vast regions of land in the Western Territories, but there is no reason applying to those Territories which applies to the occupation of houses and tenements in this city.

If the Senator from Kansas wishes time to look into the bill further, I have no objection; but the motion comes up in regular order; it is not subject to objection.

Mr. PLUMB. I understand the effect of the motion.

Mr. SHERMAN. I withdraw my motion, but give notice that in a day or two I shall feel myself bound by the instruction of the Committee on Foreign Relations and in obedience to the express wish of the Secretary of State to urge speedy action on the bill. I shall call it up within two or three days.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further concurrent or other resolutions, the order of morning business is closed.

PACIFIC COAST NAVAL STATION.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 8) providing for the appointment of a commission to select a site for a naval station on the Pacific coast, which was introduced by me on the 12th of December.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read at length.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas the military and naval defenses of the United States, the construction and repair of our shipping, and the promotion and security of our commerce have ever been subjects justifying in the American mind a policy of liberal appropriations for the improvement of harbors, construction of fortifications, erection of light-houses, establishing a Navy, with suitable navy-yards and naval depots, until the Atlantic seacoast from New Brunswick to Strait of Florida presents a cordon of military and naval defenses and commercial aids, with numerous navy-yards, including all the facilities for the construction and repair of vessels and equipments, and the manufacture of ordnance and munitions of war, and all of which have been established with a view mainly of enabling the United States to successfully compete in military, naval, and commercial prowess, advancement, and necessary conflict with the European powers facing the United States in that direction; and

Whereas the territorial empire of the United States presents another great national front, bordering on the eastern shores of the Pacific Ocean, with more than 2,000 miles of sea-line, rapidly growing into military, naval, and commercial importance, confronted not only with formidable European military and naval establishments in the islands of the Pacific to the westward and in the British and Russian possessions to the northward, but with the vast Asian empires and their dependencies, with their over 700,000,000 of inhabitants, who are rapidly turning their attention to improvements in the arts of war, offensive and defensive, and which must at no distant day become powers on the Pacific Ocean not to be ignored by the more civilized nations of the world, while as yet we have but a single navy-yard on all this extended coast-line, and none north of the thirty-eighth parallel of north latitude; and

Whereas the Pacific Northwest, embracing the State of Oregon and the Territories of Washington, Idaho, Western Montana, and Alaska, in addition to being possessed of great agricultural, pastoral, and mineral resources, and a great and rapidly increasing commerce, internal and foreign, has within its western borders, and in close proximity to the most magnificent harbors and inland seas, immense bodies of the best quality of iron, coal, lime and other stone, and almost boundless forests of the finest timber in the world, suitable in all respects and admirably adapted for the construction and repair of ships, and extensive water-power for propelling machinery, including every natural requisite and facility for the establishment of a first-class navy-yard: Therefore,

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, required to appoint a commission, composed of three competent naval officers, whose duty it shall be to examine the coast north of the forty-second parallel of north latitude, in the State of Oregon and Territories of Washington and Alaska, and select a suitable site, having due regard to the commercial and naval necessities of that coast, for a navy-yard, and, having selected such site, shall, if upon private lands, estimate its value and ascertain the price for which it can be purchased, and of their proceedings and action make full and detailed report to the Secretary of the Navy; and the Secretary of the Navy shall transmit such report, with his recommendations, to Congress.

SEC. 2. That to defray the expenses of such commission the sum of $——, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, more than thirteen years ago I endeavored to attract the attention of the Senate to the importance of naval establishments, including ship-building, dock-yards, and supply stations, on the waters of the Pacific Ocean. In the Forty-ninth Congress I again sought to enlist interest in that direction. The effort is now renewed, encouraged by strong words of recommendation from the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, and approved by the present Secretary of the Navy.

While from the beginning of our Government to the present time, or, to be entirely accurate, until June 30, 1887, there has been expended by the United States in improvements, expenses, and the preservation of the navy-yards, naval stations, and property bought for such purposes, including sites and dry-docks, the sum of $53,994,002.88, not including the sum of $2,954,175.43 expended on the old Philadelphia navy-yard, and which was sold December 22, 1875, for $1,000,000, making a sum total expended of $56,948,178.31, only about 5 per cent. of this amount has been expended west of the Alleghany Mountains. The yards and stations on which this amount of nearly $60,000,000 has been expended are denominated and located as follows:

Navy-yards: Portsmouth, N. H.; Boston, Mass.; New York, N. Y.; League Island, Pa., now closed; Washington, D. C., now used as an ordnance yard; Norfolk, Va.; Pensacola, Fla., and Mare Island, Cal.

Naval stations: New London, Conn., now closed; Key West, Fla.; Sacket's Harbor, N.Y., now closed; New Orleans, La., not improved and I believe now leased; Port Royal, S. C., a coaling station; and a naval property never improved at Blythe Island, Georgia. Of all these fourteen establishments but one, that of Mare Island, in California, is located on the waters of the Pacific. Upon the granite dock at the latter, inaugurated about thirty-five years ago, there has been expended about $3,000,000, and this yard is not yet in all its establishments entirely completed. If, then, navy-yards, dry-docks, and naval supply stations are to be deemed essential, or even important only to a nation in a state of peace or war, then all must agree without hesitation that one such establishment only, however well planned and equipped in all its appointments, is wholly inadequate to meet the wants of the country on the waters of the Pacific.

The Secretary of the Navy, in his late annual report, in referring to the fact that less than one year ago this country was destitute of three manufactories necessary to the construction and armament of a modern war vessel, namely, that of steel forging for the heavier guns, that of armor for iron-clad vessels, and that of the secondary batteries—machine and rapid-firing guns—an essential portion of the armament, and in congratulating the country that "now all three manufactories are in process of construction under contracts of the Department," very properly remarks:

> It was a fatal mistake for this country to be dependent upon any other nation for its implements of war.

It might with equal propriety and truth be said that it is a fatal mistake to permit this country, or any great section or portion of it, to remain longer in an absolutely defenseless condition, not only in respect of ships, guns, and fortifications, but also of properly established and thoroughly equipped naval stations and navy-yards, with suitable docks, foundries, machine-shops, and provision stores, all so advantageous in time of peace, and so absolutely essential in time of war, as bases of naval operations in the country's defense.

The recent history of naval architecture and naval establishments in Europe, so far from furnishing an argument in favor of dispensing with navy-yards and docks, presents forcible reasons to the contrary. The five great home dock-yards of Great Britain, those of Chatham, Sheerness, Portsmouth, Pembroke, and Devonport and Keyham, which are really one, have, notwithstanding the innumerable British private yards on the Clyde, Tyne, Wear, and Tees, been constructed at a cost up to March 31, 1884 (according to the late report of Naval Constructor Hichborn of October 12, 1885), of $63,684,570, not including some $12,000,000 expended for timber and other material for ship-building and the outfit of vessels, making a total of over $75,000,000 represented in these five home dock-yards alone. These give 18,000 men employment the entire year at the average wages of $1.03.

From this same report we find that the total sum expended by the British Government in the fifteen years ending April 1, 1884, upon new building and the repair of vessels of the royal navy aggregated $179,649,625, besides $37,745,650 for incidental charges, making a grand total of $217,395,275, or over one-fourth of the total of naval appropriations during the same period. And of this amount $44,150,575 only were expended in contract work, while $173,244,700, or over four-fifths of the sum appropriated for building and repairs, were expended in the public dock-yards.

The Pembroke dock-yard, said to be the best of home British yards adapted to building purposes, comprising 77 acres of land, has 14 building-slips and 1 dry-dock. This, however, is not a "fitting-out yard," as it has but 1 dock, no basins, and but a limited amount of stores, and vessels built there are sent to other yards as a rule for such purposes. The Devonport and Keyham dock-yards are really one. They are distant from each other but half a mile and connected by the great Keyham Tunnel Railway, the two yards covering 140 acres of land. But it is at the Portsmouth dock-yard that the enterprise, statesmanship, energy, and power of the English Government are most conspicuously represented in this great auxiliary to naval efficiency and power. It has 3,900 feet water-front, 7 building-slips, 9 dry-docks, 2 wet-basins of nearly 4 acres, and contains 115 acres; gives constant employment to nearly 6,000 men, requiring an annual expenditure in the form of wages alone of nearly $2,000,000. The exact figures for the year 1884, as given in the report of Naval Constructor Hichborn, were 5,660 employés, at a cost of £383,660.

Passing to the Chatham dock-yard, on the Medway, we are told "it is but little inferior to Portsmouth." It has 4 dry-docks, 10 building-slips, besides large foundries, store-houses, workshops, etc., and covers 95 acres; while that of Sheerness, although important, does not equal in value or importance either of the two former. It covers 57 acres, has 5 dry-docks, 1 building-slip, 1 wet-dock covering nearly 4 acres, store-house, foundries, etc.

In addition to these home yards and docks, established at a cost of $75,000,000, Great Britain has establishments for building and repairing vessels at Gibraltar, Malta, Yarmouth, Deal, Bermuda, Bombay, Ascension, Antigua, Jamaica, Good Hope, Trincomalee, Halifax, Kingston, Esquimalt, and other points in her provinces and other places under her control.

The five great dock-yards of France—Cherbourg, on the English Channel; Toulon, on the Mediterranean; Brest, near the English Channel, and L'Orient and Rochefort, on the Bay of Biscay—go far in their contributions toward the naval dignity and importance and maritime power of France. They have, we are told, collectively, an area of over 900 acres, contain 24 dry-docks, "and are complete in all the requirements for building, repairing, fitting out, and preservation of ships, and the management of stores and articles required for a navy. The quays, basins, and slips, we are further assured, are of the most substantial character, which if duplicated in the United States would require decades and several hundreds of millions of dollars." The number of men employed has for many years past averaged over 25,000, at an average per diem of 52 cents; and in this statement the French naval establishments of Havre, Bayonne, Dunkirk, and Indret on the Loire are not included.

Russia, the third great naval power of the world, furnishes us examples worthy of imitation in the number of her vessels and men, rather than by her docks and yards, although her naval depot at Cronstadt, on the Baltic, 16 miles from St. Petersburg, two navy-yards at St. Petersburg, and her naval stations at Nikolaief and Sebastopol, on the Black Sea, are important aids to the efficiency and effectiveness of the naval power of Russia. Even Germany and Italy, neither claiming to be a first-class naval power, have in recent years furnished us examples of public spirit, governmental energy, and statesmanship in this regard worthy our admiration and imitation. The three great German dock-yards of Kiel and Dantzic, on the Baltic, and Wilhelmshaven, on the North Sea, are unsurpassed in costliness, magnificence, and efficiency by any in the world. There have been expended in the latter for basins, docks, buildings, and other works in the last twenty-five years over $20,000,000. It has a capacity, as represented in the report before referred to, "equal to the requirements of our entire Navy during peace, and its defenses are already so formidable that in 1870 the French, with their powerful ironclads and rifle-guns, refrained from attacking it."

So Italy, notwithstanding all her political turmoils and dissensions, has within the past twenty-five years, since its unification, constructed a dock-yard at Spezia, which, it is said, "for capacity and completeness is equal to all our navy-yards combined." This great work was begun as late as 1861, is designed for nine building-slips and ten dry-docks, and, up to 1872, over $10,000,000 had been expended on it.

But while the European nations are in this respect pursuing a policy, based not upon mere expediency, not prompted by the imperative and pressing necessities of actual war, but one dictated by wise statesmanship, the result of mature design, enlightened policy, and a deliberate and far-seeing plan in time of profound peace, marked by a prevision characteristic of true diplomacy and exalted statesmanship, how has it been and how is it to-day with this Government? The establishment of all our naval stations and dock-yards, with perhaps one or two exceptions, has been the result of a pressing necessity at the time. Their selection, construction, and equipment have not been the outgrowth of that statesmanship that sees the end from the beginning, and comprehends from the present the necessities of the future, but the expediency of the hour alone has been the rule that has obtained almost universally in this country.

For over sixteen years after the adoption of the Constitution, although Washington as Chief Executive had used every argument in his power to induce Congress to appropriate money to establish navy-yards, not a dollar had been appropriated for that purpose. The construction of our first ships, authorized by reason of the piratical attacks on our commerce by the Algerian corsairs, was in private ship-yards. These were commenced in 1794. In 1801, Congress having given a deaf ear to the recommendations of the President to appropriate money for the purpose, he purchased on his own responsibility the sites of the navy-yards at Portsmouth, Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Washington, and Norfolk. And this action on the part of the President was finally approved by Congress, which on March 3, 1801, made an appropriation of half a million dollars for the purpose of improving them.

But while nearly sixty millions of dollars have been expended in the last eighty-seven years, even yet we have no settled policy on this subject. The great necessities brought on by actual war, first, by that of 1812; second, by the piratical depredations on our commerce by the West India freebooters in 1821; third, the Mexican war, and fourth, our late civil war, have demonstrated beyond all question and in the most emphatic terms, not only the great importance of yards and docks for the building, repairing, and provisioning of ships of our Navy, but also the absolute imbecility of a policy in such great national matters that is regulated, dictated, and controlled by mere expediency alone.

The war of 1812, during which our Navy, weak, unsupported, and insignificant as it was, won glory upon our northern lakes as imperishable as the stars, and clothed the name of Commodore Perry and others with a fame as abiding as the light of the sun, led, before the close of that war, in addition to the six original navy-yards, to the establishment of seven other stations, namely, Whitehall, on Lake Champlain; Sacket's Harbor, on Lake Ontario; Erie, on Lake Erie; Charleston, S. C.; Baltimore, Md.; Newport, R. I., and New Orleans, La. The troubles with the West India piratical crafts in 1821 brought about the establishment of a naval station at Key West, and a navy-yard at Tartar Point, Pensacola.

The Naval Commission, in their report of December 1, 1883, in referring to this branch of this important subject, say:

> Both of these places (Key West and Pensacola) were brought into still greater prominence during the Mexican war, which demonstrated the necessity of a naval station on the Gulf; while during the late civil war Port Royal, Key West, and Mound City became among the most important naval stations in the possession of the Government. It is impossible to foresee what particular section of the country may be included in the theater of war, or what naval station may become, for the time being, of most value. When, in 1854, our only navy-yard west of the Alleghanies was retroceded to the city of Memphis, the most far-seeing eye could not have discerned the value it would attain in 1862.

But it was not until the convulsions of the late civil war had seized the great corpus of our political, military, and naval fabric, and every nerve center of these great organizations felt the disturbing pressure of actual and terrible war, that the great necessities of our nation in regard to naval stations, navy-yards, docks, and efficient naval-supply sources generally became so absolutely apparent. Not until then was the public mind of this nation thoroughly awakened to the criminal neglect of our Government in the past in dealing with this subject, and to the lamentable fact of the then wholly insufficient condition of our navy-yards for the practical and stern purposes of actual war.

The following extract from the report made by the Secretary of the Navy, in 1864, will best illustrate our condition in this regard at that critical period of our nation's history. He says:

> When hostilities commenced our Government had provided no suitable navy-yards to manufacture the necessary machinery for our rapidly expanding Navy, but the Department was compelled to rely on the few private establishments which it could divert from other engagements for the immense work that was calling out the resources of the nation.
> Great embarrassment was experienced in consequence of this neglect of the Government at the very commencement of the war, and although the naval service and the country are suffering constantly from this neglect, measures for the establishment of a suitable navy-yard for the construction and repair of iron vessels, their armature and machinery, are still delayed. * * * As early as March, 1862, and on several occasions since, I have had the honor to present my views to Congress on this subject. The earnestness and frequency with which it has been brought forward must find an apology in its great importance.
> The inability of our present establishments for the work imposed by this war has been the source of inexpressible anxiety, and often of great disappointment and public injury. To relieve the navy-yards from work which they have but limited means to execute, and to secure necessary repairs, the Department has been compelled to establish stations for machinery and means of refitment at Mound City, Memphis, New Orleans, Ship Island, Pensacola, Key West, Port Royal, Beaufort, Norfolk, and Baltimore. But these, and all the private establishments of the country, besides other calls upon them, have been insufficient to keep the present Navy in necessary order, so that if to the duty of blockading there were added ocean conflicts with a naval power by which our ships would be often disabled, the sad spectacle would be presented of our ships laid up in time of war for want of a proper establishment with the shops and means to repair them. * * * The Government has not, even at this time, an establishment where a plate can be made for our ironclads. The frontage or wharfage at all our navy-yards, so important for repairs, is less than is required at each of them. One yard, at least, where iron vessels, iron armor, and iron shafting can be manufactured, is now imperatively necessary.

This report of the Secretary of the Navy represented the condition in which we found ourselves during the late civil war by reason of our milk-and-water policy prior to that time in having no general plan looking to the establishment of a system of naval stations, navy-yards, and docks, at all necessary and proper points on all our coasts and great rivers that would be equal, as supply stations in case of either internal or foreign war, to the great emergencies of the hour.

This situation emphasized in emphatic terms the futility and folly and lack of statesmanship theretofore displayed, and since then practically followed by our Government, in continually discussing the question as to the propriety of abandoning those navy-yards we have, or ceding them to certain cities or States, as in the case of the cession to the city of Memphis, in Tennessee, in 1854, of the only navy-yard then west of the Alleghanies, thus losing its value in the great naval conflicts on the Mississippi River seven years later.

It is not safe, as history teaches in unmistakable lessons, to act upon the assumption or theory of perpetual peace, either at home or abroad, or to depend upon providing temporarily and suddenly to meet great emergencies when they arise. The unwisdom of such a course is well illustrated by the following clauses from the report of the Commission before referred to:

> War is the heritage of man; and for the people of the United States history will have been written in vain should they delude themselves with the idle hope of perpetual peace; and when war does come in these modern days it is swift and terrible. Within six months after hostilities commenced against Russia in 1854, the allied armies had landed and beaten the Russians on their own soil.
> In 1864, after a campaign of but eight months, Denmark was forced to cede the duchies of Schleswig-Holstein and Lauenberg in favor of Prussia and Austria.
> The Prusso-Austrian campaign of 1866 lasted but seven weeks.
> In eight months after the Franco-German war burst upon Europe the German army occupied Paris. A dynasty was overturned and the provinces of Alsace and Lorraine were wrested from the dominion of France.
> Exposed and unprepared as we are, the damage that could be inflicted upon us ere the note of warning had well sounded would be beyond calculation.
> It is a popular belief that our traditional policy of peace is easily maintained by reason of our isolation and our freedom from the entanglements which so frequently disturb the relations of European powers. But this is a delusion. We have, in common with all maritime countries, interests which we are in duty bound to support. The present disturbed condition of affairs on the Asiatic station, the construction of the Panama Canal, the interpolation of the Monroe doctrine into our political creed, our growing commerce in the Pacific, and the naval strength developed by the rising powers of South America are, each and every one, subjects prolific of questions of serious import to the people of the United States. Their Government may at any day be called upon to take its stand and carry into practical effect the broad and enlightened principles which have characterized its foreign policy. To do this, and to exercise that moral influence which belongs to us of right as one of the wealthiest and most liberal members of the great family of nations, a certain reserve of force is absolutely essential.
> Now, the number, but more particularly the condition, of our navy-yards may be regarded as a part of that reserve and as an exponent of our naval power. The logical deduction, therefore, is that the power must be developed or our foreign policy be abandoned, if we would avoid national humiliation.

The gradual, and it may be said remarkably rapid, environment of the Pacific coast and Northwestern frontier by important and formidable military and naval establishments, representing in the strongest possible terms British influence, British aggression, and British power, and the military occupation, furthermore, by Great Britain of the islands of the Pacific and the Pacific Ocean itself, are circumstances which ought to arrest the attention of the people of this country, and prompt the Government to such speedy and effective action as may be a fitting response to these formidable menaces of British power.

Already Hong-Kong, Sydney, and other points on the western boundaries of the Pacific, the Fiji and other islands of the Southern Pacific, are converted into magnificent establishments as sources of naval supplies and protection for British fleets now occupying the waters of the Pacific, or which may occupy them more largely in the future. Important loans recently made to the Hawaiian Government, and His Majesty King Kalakaua personally, clearly indicate the intention of English diplomacy in that direction; and the gradually waning power of the Hawaiian King and the disturbed condition of his realm only give encouragement to British rapacity and the well-known desire of Great Britain for extension of territory and enlargement of political and commercial power.

Reaching out from Halifax in the east, one of the greatest military railways ever constructed by man menaces our northern frontier its entire length, riveting the iron rails of its western terminus to one of the most magnificent, expensive, and formidable military and naval establishments in the world, already established and equipped by Great Britain at Esquimalt, on the waters of the Pacific near Victoria, on Vancouver's Island, in British Columbia, soon to be supplemented and strengthened by one no less significant or important at Port Moody.

The Canadian Pacific Railway, while in one sense a great commercial highway, is nevertheless in its inception and completion the outgrowth of military genius and British diplomacy, worthy the men and the nation that conceived the plan and executed the work. It must not be forgotten that lying on and along our entire northern boundary, and on the very border of which is constructed this great military highway, lie the provinces of this great political, military, and naval power, separating us indeed for a distance of over 500 miles from 555,000 square miles of our possessions in Alaska.

Reaching out therefore from Halifax through the Canadian provinces, passing through Kingston, Canada, one of the most strongly fortified points on this continent, through the secure anchorage for naval fleets and naval supplies in the harbor of Esquimalt, extending on one by one through the British naval stations in the several islands of the Southern Pacific, resting in security and safety in the fortifications and supply stations of Sydney and Hong-Kong, it is found our country on its northern and western boundaries is environed and menaced by a chain of British military and naval establishments and strong commercial lines of railway and steamships, which, in the unfortunate event of war between Great Britain and the United States, would give the former advantages over us as a nation of a character beyond all estimate.

The truth is our entire country on every side is completely surrounded on sea and land with a cordon of naval and military establishments, mainly British. This is forcibly illustrated in the report of the Navy-Yard Commission of December 1, 1883 (Senate Executive Document No. 55, first session Forty-eighth Congress), in these words:

Nor are we so completely isolated. On the contrary, we are environed by the naval stations of a country that but a few short years ago would have rejoiced to see the dismemberment of the Union. This has been repeatedly brought to the attention of Congress. Kingston, Canada, one of the strongest military posts of this continent, can, at the very commencement of hostilities, launch gunboats upon the upper lakes where American citizens have property to be reckoned only by the millions. Halifax, with ample resources for supplying a war fleet, is but thirty-six hours' steaming from Boston. Bermuda, with her fine dry-dock and arsenal, is but sixty hours from the capes of Virginia, commands the entrance to the Chesapeake, and as a consequence the navigable rivers of Maryland and Virginia. Nassau would be a rendezvous for British cruisers, as it was a refuge for her blockade-runners during the late civil war. The magnificent harbor of Kingston, Jamaica, with its fine navy-yard at Port Royal, is but four and a half days' steaming from our Gulf ports; and San Francisco is within three days of the British naval station of Esquimalt. Not only this, but France has a navy-yard at Port of France, Martinque, and Spain holds Cuba. Havana is but eight hours from Key West, the key of the Florida Channel and the Gulf of Mexico, and only sixty hours from the rich and populous city of New Orleans. From these stations modern war ships, of which we have no representatives, could fall upon our coast, paralyze our commerce, penetrate our harbors, and destroy such navy-yards as we now possess.

As an offset to all this what have we to offer, to what can we as a nation point with pride as means of defense or supply in the matter of either military or naval establishments on the Pacific coast? Absolutely nothing in so far as the North Pacific is concerned. The whole region from the southern boundary of Oregon to the northwestern extremity of Alaska or Behring Sea, including the mouth of the Columbia River, the great valleys of the Columbia, the Willamette, the Umpqua, and the Rogue Rivers, with their great outlets, Yaquina Bay, the Umpqua River and Coos Bay, the waters of Puget Sound, with an area of over 5,000 square miles and 1,600 miles of shore-line, and the empire of Alaska, are all absolutely defenseless, and in case of war, as at present supplied, would fall an easy and ready prey to the naval forces of Great Britain or those of any of her allies.

The whole Pacific coast, from the Gulf to Behring Sea, a distance of 4,700 miles of our country's frontier, with all its limitless resources, developed and undeveloped, its rapidly increasing population, its growing cities, towns, and villages, its immense commerce, its expanding trade, its rapidly developing industries, is all absolutely defenseless and at the mercy of Great Britain whenever an excuse for hostile action may arise. In all this distance of coast-line, facing the widest and grandest of all oceans, already occupied by the forts and naval stations and fleets of the greatest military and naval power on earth, with the government representing that power continually insisting on misconstruing treaties, in making unreasonable and unjust demands, and insisting on illegal and iniquitous exactions in the matter of the fisheries in Canadian and Alaskan waters, we have the one comparatively insignificant and ill-equipped naval station of Mare Island, in the State of California.

To this alone must our naval power look as a base of supplies in case of an attack on any part of our Western or Northwestern frontiers by any foreign power. This as a means of protection to the whole coast of Oregon, Washington, and Alaska is absolutely unavailable and inefficient, as all must agree. With this alone as a base of naval operations and supplies the mailed hand of the military and naval power of Great Britain, in case of a conflict, would fall with unimpeded, relentless, and destructive power upon the people, the industries, the commerce of the Pacific Northwest. In such a case Oregon, Washington, and Alaska, with all their limitless resources, unprotected, imperiled as they are, would become the sport and toy of British aggression.

It would not then be 54° 40′ or fight; it would be, so far as Great Britain is concerned, 42° without a fight. In such an event the tribute that would be exacted from a defenseless but worthy people would aggregate an amount far in excess of that necessary to place, us in a position to enforce peace "without a sacrifice of rights, principles, and dignity," or, failing in this, that we may be prepared to meet the emergency of war on an equal footing with any foe.

So far from receiving encouragement from the General Government on the Pacific coast in the way of giving us protection, only recently, by an order of the War Department, the troops at Fort Canby, at the mouth of the Columbia, have, for some as yet unexplained cause, been withdrawn and the fort abandoned. The reasons for this backward movement will, I presume, be furnished by the honorable Secretary of War presently in response to a resolution adopted by the Senate on my motion early in the present session. Until this answer is in, criticism would not be in order, and may not be then.

It has been frequently remarked, it is true, and with some force, that navy-yards, being simply ship-building and manufacturing establishments, combined with arsenals for the storage of munitions of war, can not, in one sense, be properly classified in the list of military defenses.

It may be said, with some degree of truth, that being in a measure incapable of defense ordinarily in and of themselves, and being a source of supplies, they are liable to invite attack; but notwithstanding all this the history of this country, as well as that of every naval power on earth, emphasizes their necessity in the general economy of public works essential to the preservation of the influence and dignity, and the security of national and individual rights in times of peace, and the proper and successful defense of all these in the event of war.

Commodore D. B. Harmony, Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, United States Navy, in his annual report to the Secretary, of date October 15, 1887, in discussing the present condition of our navy-yard at Mare Island, California, strongly urges consideration of the establishment of additional naval resources on the waters of Puget Sound, and enforces the proposition with highly important suggestions and incontrovertible facts in these words:

NAVY-YARD, MARE ISLAND, CALIFORNIA.

This navy-yard is our only naval station on the shores of the Pacific. It would be our only base for naval operations for the defense of the ports of this coast, for the protection of our Pacific trade, and for the assertion, if it should become necessary, of the dignity and strength of the nation upon this the greatest of all ocean areas. At present European naval powers are rapidly acquiring the insular countries of this part of the world, their movements advancing so far as to make among themselves a virtual partition of the western Pacific, and extending so far of late as to practically annex groups of islands where American trade and civilizing influences had been theretofore paramount. In considering these movements the possibility does not seem a distant one that our extreme western territory may be hampered and surrounded by the possessions of aggressive naval powers. This, in addition to the immense development upon land and sea in the Pacific that will follow the opening of an interoceanic canal, will force upon this country a greater naval activity, for which we should be prepared. Not only should the question be considered of the establishment of additional naval resources in the waters of Puget Sound, the great coal and iron regions of the future upon this coast, but measures should be taken to place this our only naval station now existing upon the coast in a fully equipped condition. When the emergency arises, and the strain and stress of preparation or actual war is upon us, there will be no time for the establishment of the necessary works, which require considerable time for construction and a continuous though not extravagant expenditure of money.

The Secretary of the Navy, in his recent annual report to the President, of December 6, 1887, gives his approval to this recommendation of Commodore Harmony, and emphasizes its importance by special reference, in these words:

Special attention is called to the considerations presented in the report in reference to the provision of additional facilities for naval work on the Pacific coast, especially in the neighborhood of Puget Sound, the great coal and iron region of the future upon this coast. Apart from this question of an additional naval station, measures should certainly be taken to place the only naval station now existing upon the coast, that at San Francisco, in a fully equipped condition.

In this connection I am also, through the courtesy of Lieut. Commander Charles H. Stockton, United States Navy, at present on duty in the Bureau of Yards and Docks in Washington, enabled to present an interesting memorandum bearing directly, and with much practical force, on the question now under discussion. This memorandum, I am advised by Commander Stockton, is based on a series of official lectures recently delivered by that officer, at the instance of its president, before the students of the Naval War College at Newport, R. I., on the existing naval, commercial, and international conditions of the interoceanic canal and the policy that should be adopted by our Government. This officer stands high as an authority on such naval affairs as he discusses. I beg to submit his contribution entire, and ask that it be incorporated into my remarks. It is as follows:

MEMORANDUM ON THE ADVANTAGES OF ESTABLISHING A NAVAL STATION AT PUGET SOUND.

Puget Sound consists of about 5,000 square miles of water area, and nearly 1,600 miles of shore-line, with fine harbors for naval purposes, a narrow entrance and inside straits capable of being strongly fortified, and with a surrounding country rich in ship-building timber, in coal, iron, and limestone, and with railroads built and building which will provide it, after San Francisco, with the best railroad facilities on the Pacific coast. It offers the only adequate and secure harbors, besides San Francisco, for the largest class of war-vessels on our Pacific coast, which not only makes it fit for a naval station, but makes it susceptible of an attack from a powerful hostile squadron.

On account of the watar area of Puget Sound, the Strait of Juan de Fuca, Washington Sound, and the outside and inside waters leading towards Alaska, the defense of this coast line will have to be to a great extent by a naval force, which force will necessarily require a place for repair, docking, refitting, and provisioning near by. This can be located in one of the many secure harbors in Puget Sound, or it may be advisable to utilize one of the large fresh-water lakes lying so close to this sound. In addition to this the recent remarkable discoveries of iron ore and good coal place the three great elements for iron and steel manufacture, of good coking coal, rich iron ore, and limestone within 50 miles of tide-water; a combination that exists nowhere else in the United States, and few places in the world. These all point to the strong probability that this place will develop rapidly as a place for the manufacturing of iron and steel, and consequently for iron or steel ship-building; hence, it seems wise to prepare in time for the construction of iron and steel war-vessels at this place.

Furthermore, Alaska, now in a semi-colonial state, seems on the verge of development. We are separated from this portion of our domain by 500 miles of water navigation and by the territory belonging to the strongest naval power in the world—Great Britain.

From the topographical, maritime, and climatic conditions existing in Alaska, this Territory especially requires a naval force for its police in times of peace and for its protection and defense in time of war. The base for such operations both in peace and war will be naturally in the waters of the Puget Sound, thus saving the long and hazardous trip to San Francisco for disabled vessels, or for vessels denied by war or neutral obligations the coal supply existing in British Columbia.

The want of naval and other defenses in these waters has been the subject of discussion among British officers, and when regrets were expressed by some that San Juan Island, which commands the most available and best channel to the Nanaimo coal-mines and the Pacific terminus of the Canadian Railroad, was in the hands of the United States, others retorted that in case of war with the United States, a very small naval force from Esquimalt would at once seize it, as there were neither fortifications, garrison, nor any American naval force probable or possible to prevent it.

In regard to the value of the English dock-yard at Esquimalt, British Columbia, it presents two phases, one in regard to the United States, the other in regard to the control of the Pacific Ocean.

First, in regard to any offensive operations against the United States. It is but 18 miles from Port Angeles and San Juan Island, Washington Territory, and 30 miles from the entrance to Puget Sound. These places could be seized at once by a naval force issuing from Esquimalt Harbor, and thus would go one of the most valuable commercial and mineral districts on the Pacific coast, and the most valuable region for unworked naval material existing anywhere on the coast of the United States.

Second. As to its importance as a base of operations against San Francisco, the Columbia River, and the Pacific seacoast generally, I can show how great this is considered by quoting from a book written by an English military officer, Captain Colomb, in 1879, who in advocating the enlargement of its resources, its fortifications, and the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railroad, says: "Our power of keeping the sea in the North Pacific rests entirely and exclusively on our ability to secure British Columbia against all attacks, and by guarding this North Pacific gem, set as it is with black diamonds, we shall be establishing a post naturally capable of imperial strength, and about as near Australia as Mare Island. It would be an outwork against that steady advance of Russia, which, sooner or later, will shift the real eastern question from the Mediterranean to the Pacific, and it would also hold a pistol to the head of San Francisco." * * *

Since the above was written the home government of Great Britain has granted funds to aid in the extension and completion of the dry-dock at Esquimalt, has made and is making provision for the armament and defense of the post; the Canadian Pacific Railroad has been built, and even more recently a railroad from Esquimalt to the coal mines in the northern part of Vancouver Island. The direct and indirect expenses incurred in this can not now be given or ascertained, but they all point one way. The Canadian Pacific Railroad as a commercial enterprise is a part of the American system of railroads, its virtual terminus is New York, it is tapped at the Sault St. Marie by American railroads, and its Pacific terminus is in the air until it reaches the shores of the Puget Sound; but as a military railroad it is British from end to end, connecting the military stronghold of Halifax with that of Esquimalt, and both threatening, and intended to threaten, our Atlantic and Pacific seacoasts.

To take the question of coal alone, in case of war with England were the Puget Sound district to pass out of our hands, and there is nothing now to prevent it, we would be without coal supply on the Pacific coast, except the meager supply from beyond the Cascade range or the indifferent coal from the Mount Diablo regions. Eastern coal could not come on account of the maritime preponderance of England, and of course the Sydney, Australia, and British Columbia supply would at once be cut off.

If there should be any skepticism about the British preponderence in the Pacific, I can call attention to the fact that the three fortified ports of Hong-Kong, Sydney, and Esquimalt furnish well-equipped sources of supply, repair, and docking for the naval fleets that already center there; the Fiji Islands are an English colony; while our coaling stations in the Pacific are in every way unworthy of the name, would be useless to us in war, and we would probably be denied by English influence the right to coal and refit by the little neutral sovereignties in which they are placed; or if this should not be done, then, as an English admiral has expressed it, the naval force of Great Britain would at once destroy the undefended deposits of coal placed among these islands. On the shores of Puget Sound there should be placed a naval station, then, first, on account of the great raw material resources for naval purposes existing there; second, for a source of supplies, refit, and repair for vessels engaged in the police, protection, and defense of the coasts and waters of the United States reaching from Oregon to Alaska; and, third, as a fortified naval station, to counteract the menacing attitude of the English naval station at Esquimalt, near by, intended to be a military thorn in our side, like Halifax or Bermuda on the Atlantic.

Mr. President, if, following out the suggestions of the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks and those of the Secretary of the Navy and Lieutenant-Commander Stockton, Puget Sound, rather than the waters of the Columbia River, Yaquina, Umpqua, Coos Bay, or Gray's Harbor, should be selected for the establishment of a grand naval station, yards, docks, foundries, machine-shops, supply stores, etc., it would be found that but few if any of the great fundamental conditions and requirements deemed important in the establishment of such structures are wanting.

With the proper military fortifications that must at an early period be erected along the shores, and at the mouth of the Straits of San Juan de Fuca, a navy-yard on the waters of Puget Sound at any one of the very many practicable sites on that great inland sea would meet the first two of the necessary conditions, namely,

First, that of being located within the lines of defense, and,

Second, that of being secure from attack by either sea or land.

Third. Moreover, in the third place, the interior lines of communication to the principal sources of supplies could be fully secured by a navy-yard located on the waters of Puget Sound in time of war.

Fourth. In such a case the establishment would be located not only near a safe and commodious harbor, but on one of the safest and most commodious of all the known harbors of the world.

Fifth. It would be easy of access, and would admit, at all stages of water, without dredging, vessels of the largest draught.

Sixth. No difficulty would be experienced in procuring at reasonable rates skilled labor in the several departments of wood and iron shipbuilding and marine engineering.

Seventh. The facilities of the surrounding country for furnishing the necessary materials of timber, coal, iron ore, and potable water are unexcelled in any country in the world.

Eighth. The character of the ground at innumerable points on Puget Sound is such that dry-docks and wet-basins in numbers sufficient to meet all probable demands can be constructed at a reasonable cost, with ample area for all the necessary structures of a combined shipbuilding and repairing yard and naval arsenal.

Ninth. The supply from innumerable fresh-water lakes and streams, whose waters are inexhaustible, of good potable water would meet every requirement.

Tenth. A navy-yard so located would be difficult to blockade.

Eleventh. It would be surrounded by a climate than which none more salubrious or enjoyable can be found in any State or Territory of the Union.

The foregoing, Mr. President, are the eleven conditions specified by the Naval Commission in their report on the navy-yards of this country, of December 1, 1883, as desirable and the existence of which are deemed important in the selection of a site for a navy-yard. Every one of these conditions is met on the waters of Puget Sound. It may furthermore be said with propriety and force that all of these and others not mentioned, which might be urged, would be present, were the site selected on the waters of the Columbia or the Willamette at any one of any number of convenient points between Portland and Astoria, or at any of the other points I have indicated on the Oregon and Washington coast.

The age of granite docks has given way in these latter years, not in this case, however, to that of iron or steel but to that of wood, and herein lie the unsurpassed facilities afforded for the construction of naval docks on the waters of the Columbia River and on Puget Sound, where there is such a superabundance of the finest forests of fir, cedar, pine, hemlock, and other coniferous timber, besides maple, myrtle, ash, oak, and various other species of deciduous timber, upon which the eyes of man ever rested. The best judgment of those versed in naval architecture has long since condemned the granite dock, and given wood the preference. The latter, or timber docks, are not only more durable, less subject to the influences of frost, but the cost of construction is not much more, if any, as a general rule, than one-third that of those constructed of granite; while the cost of maintaining them in repair is also much less.

Naval Constructor Hichborn, United States Navy, in his interesting report on European docks and yards, remarks as follows on this subject:

> Wooden docks cost from 30 to 50 per cent. less than those of stone, and in climates where they are exposed to severe frosts are much cheaper in maintenance; extensive repairs are not required within the first twenty years.

While Commodore Harmony, United States Navy, Chief of Bureau of Yards and Docks, in a communication addressed to Hon. William McAdoo, of the House Naval Committee, on April 6, 1886, in referring to this subject, says:

> My proposition to build docks of timber is based upon the fact that they can be built at such a small price comparatively. The three proposed will not cost more than three-fourths of what the granite dock at New York cost and about three-fifths of the one at Mare Island. * * * The main objection to a granite dock is, beside the cost, that the alternate freezing and thawing affect the joints of the stones and the water gets in, throwing the stone out of place and requiring constant repairs. * * * There is every reason to believe that a dock constructed of timber will last for centuries with proper care. In case of a piece of timber being found rotten it will be as easy a matter to replace it as to take a defective plank out of a ship and put in a sound one.

To illustrate this question reference may properly be made to the fact that there has been expended in the construction of the granite dry-dock at Mare Island, California, nearly $3,000,000, at least not less than $2,800,000, and it is not yet entirely completed; whereas a wooden dock of the same capacity that would last longer, would cost infinitely less to keep annually in repair, and which would, according to the best authority, be in all respects superior, could have been constructed for less than one-third the amount, and could, on the Columbia River or on Puget Sound, be constructed for still much less. In this respect alone, therefore, the advantages presented by the North Pacific coast, both the Columbia River and Puget Sound, are almost beyond estimate.

While no government should adopt a policy that would tend to crush individual enterprise in the matter of ship-building, but should rather, on the contrary, give every proper encouragement to this great industry, which creates markets for our raw material and gives employment to labor, skilled and otherwise, consistent with national security and the maintenance of national dignity and a proper regard for the general welfare and common defense. still these individual interests, it must be conceded, are always promoted in the end in proportion as the public interests are guarded, protected, and defended. Every individual industry, therefore, the rights of labor and capital, the accommodation and protection of our commercial marine, the naval service of the country, the security, peace, prosperity, and general welfare of all our people on the great Pacific Northwest, and, indeed, throughout the whole country, on sea and land, at home and abroad, can not but be vastly promoted by the early establishment of a permanent and respectable governmental naval station at some suitable point on some one of the great arms of the Pacific Ocean on our Northwestern frontier.

Already much substantial progress has been made in the matter of ship-building on the Oregon and Washington coast, at Coos Bay, Yaquina, Skomakowa on the Columbia River, Portland, Astoria, Shoalwater Bay, Gray's Harbor, and at the various ports of Tacoma and Seattle, and also at many of the large milling establishments on Puget Sound. During the year ending June 30 last, according to the report of the custom-house at Port Townsend, 29 new vessels were built on Puget Sound, representing a net tonnage of 4,854.36 tons. Of these 12 were steam-vessels and 17 sailers.

The largest steamer, the Clara Bell, built at Tacoma, was 99 feet 8 inches in length, with a net tonnage of 111.86 tons; and the largest sailer, the Brigantine, built at Port Blakeley, was 166 feet 8 inches in length, with a net tonnage of 579.39 tons. This was an increase of over 100 per cent. on the number built the year previous, there being but 14 built that year, and an increase of 300 per cent. in the net tonnage, or a tonnage of 4,854.36 tons for 1886–'87 against 1,642.29 in 1885–'86.

Hon. Eugene Semple, the present governor of Washington Territory, in his able, interesting, and comprehensive report to the Secretary of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and to whom I am indebted for many of the statistics I have given, after giving valuable information and statistics upon this, as also upon various other of the great industries of that Territory, concludes his statement on the subject of ship-building in these words:

> There is great need of a dry-dock on Puget Sound, not only to accommodate our commercial marine, but for the use of Government vessels; and it is to be hoped that, as the questions of rehabilitating our Navy and increasing our means of coast defense are now being prominently considered, the strategic importance of the coast of Washington Territory, it being on the borders of a possible belligerent and in proximity to a formidable naval station of a foreign power, will not be overlooked.

Much might be added by way of elaboration of the argument in favor of the establishment of a naval station as suggested. Reference might be made to the near future, when the waters of the two great oceans will commingle together through a Nicaraguan ship-canal and when the ships of commerce of all nations and the navies of the world will pass to and fro across the great isthmus now separating them. Attention might also be attracted to the several great transcontinental railways now completed across the continent, spanning a hemisphere, connecting sea with sea, and river and sound and ocean with the Great Lakes, and uniting in close communion the great trade arteries and commercial marts of the nation.

I might cite, too, the value and volume of the great industries of agriculture and mining, as well coal, iron, lime as the precious metals, stock-raising, lumber, wool-growing, the salmon fisheries, manufactures of various kinds that are being carried on, and all of which are rapidly increasing in the States and Territories of the Pacific Northwest to an extent not quite appreciated, I am sure, by our Eastern friends.

I may not be given credit for either candor or truth when I tell you that the value of the salmon of the Columbia River and adjacent waters, packed in cans and shipped to all parts of this country and of the world, since that industry was inaugurated, twenty-two years ago, has averaged considerably over $2,000,000 per annum and aggregated nearly $46,000,000; that to-day more than $2,000,000 of capital are invested in this business on the Columbia River alone; that it gives employment to over 6,000 men, to say nothing of the fisheries at Shoalwater Bay, Gray's Harbor, Tillamook, Yaquina, Coos Bay, Coquille River, and Puget Sound.

Some may be incredulous when it is said that the State of Oregon will this year ship over 18,000,000 pounds of wool and over 20,000,000 bushels of wheat; that the wholesale trade of the city of Portland, Oregon, did in the past year exceed over $60,000,000, and will more than exceed $75,000,000 during the coming year; that the value of the Columbia salmon fisheries for the past year was $2,124,000; that there were shipped by the mills of Puget Sound to foreign, coastwise, and Atlantic ports a total of 306,178,673 feet of lumber, and that the present year five mills shipped 155,731,398 feet; that the total capacity of the lumber mills of Washington Territory in superficial feet for a year of two hundred and sixty days is the enormous sum of 645,440,000 feet; that the total output of coal from the various mines of Washington Territory has been nearly 2,500,000 tons; that there were shipped from the Territory the past year 525,705 tons; that there are in Washington Territory 1,060 miles of thoroughly constructed and equipped railroad, 133 miles of which have been constructed in the past year. And yet, notwithstanding all this, Washington Territory knocks at the doors of Congress for admission into the Union in vain.

Some idea of the amount and value of the commerce of Puget Sound will be had when it is considered that during the last fiscal year nearly 1,000 vessels—994, to be entirely accurate—with an aggregate tonnage of 539,597 tons, of which 155 were coasters and 839 foreign, were entered at the custom-house of Puget Sound in the Puget Sound customs district; while the number of entries and clearances were 1,982 vessels, aggregating a tonnage of 1,054,038. The vessels entering and clearing at that port the past year aggregated 5½ each day for the entire year, or one vessel every 4 hours and 45 minutes during each day and night in the year, or one vessel every 2 hours and 22 minutes during each day of 12 hours.

It may be a surprise to some that in the matter of tonnage of American steam-vessels engaged in the foreign trade, Puget Sound stands second in the United States, New York being the first. From a memorial recently adopted by both branches of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Washington, I make the following extract:

> Puget Sound at the present time occupies a prominent position among the maritime ports of the United States, and the rapidity with which the great natural resources of the Territory are being developed will soon place this port in advance of all others. From Governor Eugene Semple's report for 1887 to the Secretary of the Interior, the following facts may be verified:
> First. In the number of American steam-vessels engaged in the foreign trade, Puget Sound stands first.
> Second. In tonnage of American steam-vessels engaged in the foreign trade Puget Sound stands second, New York being first.
> Third. In the aggregate number of American and foreign steam-vessels engaged in the foreign trade we stand seventh.
> Fourth. In the aggregate tonnage of American and foreign steam-vessels engaged in the foreign trade Puget Sound stands seventh.
> Fifth. In the aggregate number of entrances and clearances of American and foreign vessels, steam and sail, Puget Sound stands fourth.
> Sixth. In the aggregate tonnage of all vessels, American and foreign, steam and sail, Puget Sound stands seventh.

The property valuation in Washington Territory, exclusive of railroad property, has increased over $10,000,000 the past year, being a gain of over $9,000,000 over 1885. The estimated cash value of taxable property in the Territory, exclusive of railroad property, is, on a fair valuation, $100,000,000.

Mr. President, the ocean transits and commercial currents of the world, on sea and land, are rapidly changing as material development moves forward with ever-increasing rapidity, and especially are these changes significant and marked in connection with the advancement of civilization upon and over and around that great empire west of the Rocky Mountains. These changes in population, trade, commerce, and in commercial, social, and political influence and power are rapidly disturbing the equilibrium of the past, and will disturb it still more, and very rightfully, too, in the near future.

The scepter which for all the years of our nation's life has been emblematical of and which represented the political, social, and moral influence and power of New England and of the Eastern and Middle States in the councils of the nation, and of that policy which has given shape, direction, and momentum to most of the legislation of this country in the past, and which has not at all times, it is to be regretted, been founded in exact justice to the great West, and particularly to the great Pacific Northwest, must at no distant day recognize as significantly potential, if not indeed controlling, a political influence and power based upon and emanating from an intelligent and powerful constituency of this nation, who have, amid perils unparalleled and dangers and toils unprecedented, planted firmly in the great Pacific Northwest the foundations of powerful States and of an empire of civilization and political and moral power whose voice will in time and at no distant day be heard and respected, if not through modest appeal, by the potentiality and influence of its own inherent force.

I move, therefore, Mr. President that the pending joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I trust that committee may feel constrained to give it early and favorable consideration.

Before the conclusion of Mr. MITCHELL'S remarks, as given above—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BERRY in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. DOLPH. I appeal to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] to let this joint resolution be disposed of. It will not delay final action on his bill. My colleague will be through in ten minutes, and I shall desire fifteen or twenty minutes to supplement his remarks with some remarks of my own.

Mr. BLAIR. I suppose it will be better to yield to the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the unfinished business will be laid aside temporarily, and the Senator from Oregon will resume his remarks on the joint resolution introduced by him.

Mr. MITCHELL having concluded his remarks—

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, the importance of the establishment of a first-class navy-yard and naval station upon the North Pacific coast is so great, not alone to the people of that coast but to the whole country, that I feel constrained to ask the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments while I supplement with some remarks of my own the carefully prepared and exhaustive presentation of the subject by my colleague. I should not venture to do so at this time, but for the fact that we have scarcely seriously entered upon the business of legislation, and there is no important measure pressing for consideration upon the attention of the Senate. There are some things connected with the commerce of the Pacific to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate and which are more appropriate at this time in connection with the subject under discussion than they will probably be in the near future.

My colleague has called attention to the vast sums which have been expended by the United States in providing navy-yards and naval stations. Yet with all this expenditure it must be confessed that the results are not satisfactory. This is due in part, as he has said, to the fact that our navy-yards have been provided in haste when the emergency required them, and therefore the locations were not always selected with care; and in part also to the fact that appropriations for them have been uncertain and insufficient, and could not be economically expended. The truth is that we have not to-day among the existing navy-yards a single establishment commensurate with the requirements of our present Navy.

We need on both coasts one or more establishments commensurate with the necessities of a great naval power, perfect in detail and as a whole, and of the most substantial character.

There are but few of our naval stations which are properly located. With the advent of guns that throw projectiles of a ton weight ten miles or more, inland, and thoroughly protected locations for naval stations become an imperative necessity. In view of the improvements which have been made in everything pertaining to a navy in the last few years we should with future expenditures lay the foundation for a naval establishment of modern type.

Puget Sound, as we have just heard, presents all the advantages that can be desired for a first-class naval station. The Straits of Juan de Fuca afford a safe and at all times an accessible entrance to Puget Sound from the ocean. The sound itself is one of the most magnificent inland seas upon the face of the globe. It has numerous harbors, and everywhere broad, deep, and unobstructed channels, navigable by the largest vessels that plow the ocean day or night, at all seasons of the year. With proper fortifications at Deception Pass, at Admiralty Head, and Point Wilson, which are a necessity, with or without a naval station, the whole of the sound on the American side, with its hundreds of miles of navigable channels and its numerous harbors of almost unlimited capacity, would be one vast harbor of refuge for our Navy and merchant marine in war or peace.

There is no other place on the continent where timber suitable for ship-building is so abundant and so accessible. Around the sound and along the streams that flow into it are vast forests of valuable timber trees; yellow and red fir, white and red cedar, hemlock, spruce, and pine abound, sufficient to supply the lumber market of the world for years to come. The yellow fir, the Oregon pine, as it is called upon the coast, is very valuable for ship timber, masts, and for side and deck planking. It possesses great strength and durability, and it may be obtained of any required dimensions. The trees are straight and clear from knots, and in some instances from 10 to 12 feet in diameter and from 200 to 300 feet in height. The masts of many of the vessels built on the Atlantic coast are of the yellow fir, shipped from the Columbia River and Puget Sound.

Then on the sound, as we have heard (and in close proximity to constructed and projected lines of railroads and easily accessible from tidewater) are abundant deposits of ironore suitable for making steel, and convenient to the iron deposits, ample supplies of limestone and coking coal are found. I am told that foreign capitalists are already erecting at Seattle a large establishment for the manufacture of steel rails and steel for all purposes of commerce.

The benefit of a fresh-water harbor for iron and steel vessels to lie in is well known. In fresh water they are free from barnacles and mussels, which rapidly foul the bottom while lying still in salt water. Such a fresh-water harbor may be readily provided on Puget Sound. Near Seattle, on the sound, are two fresh-water lakes, Lake Union and Lake Washington. Lake Union is but 5,000 feet from Puget Sound, has ample depth of water, and is a mile and a half in length, and the surface of the lake is 11 feet higher than the surface of the sound. Lake Washington is separated from Lake Union by a narrow neck of land, only 2,044 feet in width, through which a canal has already been constructed by private parties, which admits of the passage of vessels navigating these lakes. Lake Washington is 18½ miles in length, is from 2 to 5 miles in width, and of ample depth to permit of navigation by the largest vessels, and the level of the lake is 18½ feet above the level of the Sound. A canal with locks may be constructed from Lake Washington to the Sound with a reasonable outlay, sufficient for the passage of the largest naval vessels, thus providing a naval station with a fresh-water harbor, in which vessels may lie safe from storm and beyond the reach of the guns of an attacking fleet, and of sufficient capacity to hold the navies of the world. A survey of the several routes for a canal from Lake Washington to Puget Sound was made in October, 1874, under the direction of the War Department, by Brevet Brig. Gen. B. S. Alexander. His report of the survey is now on file in the War Department. In his report he says:

> If there were such a chance to make a great naval depot, so entirely secure, with so many advantages of climate, of coal, timber, and fresh water, free from ice, at any suitable point along the middle of the Atlantic front, or even the Gulf coast of the United States, I do not imagine there would be much hesitation on the subject. The work would probably be started at once. But situated as this harbor is, on one flank of the Pacific front of the United States, in a country yet in its infancy as regards population and resources, the case is different. Nevertheless it should at all times be remembered when this subject comes up for consideration that there are only three places on the Pacific coast of the United States where navy-yards or naval establishments of any kind can be established where they can be made secure. One of these is San Francisco, one is at San Diego, and one in the waters of Puget Sound.

Fifteen years have wrought wonderful changes in the North Pacific coast, and whatever arguments might have been urged, on account of our undeveloped resources and sparse population, at the time this report was made against the commencement of so important a work would now be met and sufficiently answered with the statement that Puget Sound has become the western terminus of two great continental lines of railroad, and the commerce of the Pacific is a prize for which the nations of the earth are contending. Great Britain, with less important interests than ours on the sound, as we have just heard, has a naval station and dry-dock at Esquimalt, the latter larger than any we have on the Atlantic coast. She keeps on Puget Sound from one to three modern war vessels, prepared for any emergency, she is now fortifying her possessions upon the sound, and with her fortified naval station and her naval vessels will command the North Pacific coast as she now commands the North Atlantic by her fortified stations at Bermuda and Halifax.

Not only does the North Pacific coast present every advantage for the establishment of a naval station, but the commerce of the coast justifies the expenditure necessary for such a station. The States and Territories which are dependent upon the Pacific Ocean for an outlet comprise an area of about 800,000 square miles, about seven times as great as the aggregate area of England, Scotland, Wales, and Ireland. Wet have from the southern boundary of California to Puget Sound nearly 2,000 miles of seacoast, while north of Cape Flattery we divide Puget Sound, with its hundreds of miles of navigable channel and numerous islands, with British Columbia. Then we have the Territory of Alaska, with 480,000 square miles of territory, with a seacoast which has been estimated, including the islands and indentations, at 25,000 miles, extending 1,200 miles north and south and 2,200 miles east and west.

There is to-day no part of the Union which is receiving more attention than the Pacific coast. With a climate many degrees milder than the climate of States in the same latitude on the Atlantic, varying with the distance from the ocean and with the altitude so as to give almost every variety of climate found in the torrid and temperate zones; with mines of the precious metals of almost fabulous richness; with vast areas of territory well adapted to agriculture, to cattle-growing, and to sheep-raising; where the grape, orange, and olive, and all the semi-tropical fruits grow to perfection, and the cereals and fruits of the temperate zone are unexcelled; with a wine industry already threatening to rival that of France; growing wools which compare favorably with the finest wools of commerce; raising wheat not excelled by that raised in the most favored wheat-growing regions of the earth; with numerous transcontinental railroad lines terminating upon the Pacific and over which trains of cars come and go freighted with the products of the continent and of Europe and of Asia; the flags of all nations seen floating from the mastheads of merchant fleets in her harbors and upon the high seas, bearing her varied productions to every port in the world; her educational institutions and intellectual culture keeping pace with her physical development, there is no part of the Union to-day which presents more attractions to the settler or offers more advantages to the investor than the Pacific coast.

Fancy can hardly picture the future of this favored region. Events which a quarter of a century ago seemed to lie in the distant and uncertain future have occured in rapid succession, and events are now occuring which foreshadow a grander development of this region than was then dreamed of.

We have an important and growing coastwise commerce upon the Pacific coast, extending from the Mexican line to Behring Straits, employing a large fleet of steamships and sailing vessels, many of the former as elegant and substantial and well adapted to the trade as are found in the coasting trade anywhere. The future development of this trade to meet the requirements of our long line of seacoast and furnish the means necessary for the interchange of the varied products of our soil, our mines, our forests, and our fisheries must be enormous. The trans-Pacific trade is in its infancy, and yet there are regular lines of steamships plying between San Francisco and the ports of China and Japan, and steamships and sailing vessels run between the ports of Puget Sound and the ports of Asia. Valuable cargoes of tea, rice, and silks are shipped from China and Japan to the Pacific coast, and thence across the continent by rail, and our lumber and flour are finding markets in China, Japan, and the Sandwich Islands and other islands of the Pacific.

New lines of transportation across the continent and new steamship lines on the Pacific will develop and stimulate this trade, which must continue to grow as the countries which lie upon the Pacific, and which contain two-thirds of the population of the earth, are developed by means of improved machinery and improved methods of production.

It is time that Congress gave careful consideration to the subject of the future control of the trade of the Pacific. We shall neither extend our commerce on the Pacific nor retain what we have by standing idly by while the leading nations of Europe are contending for it. We are already engaged in a contest with Great Britain for the trade of the Pacific, and in spite of our natural advantages it is liable to be wrested from us by her aggressive and liberal policy.

It was not an accident which made the Straits of Juan de Fuca the boundary between the United States and Great Britain. Her statesmen foresaw the importance of a colonial dependency upon the western coast of this continent, the value of Puget Sound, and the possibilities of the commerce of the Pacific, possibilities which to-day she is making extraordinary efforts to realize. In order to secure the transcontinental line of railroad terminating on Puget Sound, the Canadian Government granted a subsidy to the Canadian Pacific Railroad Company of $25,000,000, 25,000,000 acres of land, and loaned the company $35,000,000, and took back 6,666,666 acres of land at $1.30 an acre, making $10,000,000 more, and the company received a donation of 707 miles of completed railroad.

Great Britain, ever alive to the importance of maintaining her carrying trade on the high seas, in order to secure a line of steamships between Puget Sound and China and Japan and the islands of the Pacific, has subsidized the Canadian Pacific Steamship Company, which has entered the lists to contend with our American steamship lines for the trade of the Pacific Ocean. While our citizens engaged in the fishing trade are denied the privilege of purchasing supplies in the ports of the Dominion of Canada the Canadian Pacific Railroad is contending all along our Pacific coast, from San Francisco to the sound, and upon the sound, for the transcontinental passenger and freight traffic of the coast, and under at least questionable authority is permitted to take American merchandise and transport it through the British possessions and into the United States again without the payment of duty.

I clipped the other day an article from the New York Shipping List which sets out the struggle between our steamship lines and the subsidized British lines for the commerce between the Pacific coast and China and Japan, portions of which I will present to the Senate:

STRUGGLING TO MAINTAIN OUR OCEAN TRAFFIC.

Two events have recently transpired that are peculiarly significant with respect to the question of American shipping, and are worthy of the careful attention of those statesmen who talk so much and do so little toward advancing the interests of our shipping industry, maintaining the carrying trade we now hold, and encouraging our ship-owners to undertake new enterprises. The first of these is the granting of a subsidy by the British Government to the Canadian Pacific Steamship Company, which runs from Vancouver to Japan and China, and the second is the resolve of the directors of the Pacific Steamship Company to build two new steamers for their China line, the said steamers to be built in our own ship-yards if the present Administration can be induced to pay, under existing law, a fair and just compensation for ocean mail service; otherwise the company will endeavor to save 20 per cent. in the cost of their steamers by having them built abroad, which will necessitate their sailing under a foreign flag. The Pacific Mail Company was the pioneer in establishing steamer traffic across the Pacific Ocean between America and Asia, and up to the present time has successfully retained the lion's share of that traffic, although called upon to contend with keen competition. The belting of the North American continent with railroads has not only resulted in a steady expansion of the freight and passenger traffic across the Pacific Ocean, but has furthermore increased the competition between rival lines for a share of what ought to be a valuable and profitable carrying trade. So long as the company had as rivals the steamers of the Occidental and Oriental Steamship Company, which are run in the interests of the Central and Union Pacific Railroads, or those run in connection with the Northern Pacific, it was a fair fight, for all were on even terms; but the recent competition of the Canadian Pacific has brought into the field a new competitor that is fully aware of the disadvantages with which it will have to contend at the beginning of its career, and accordingly prepares for the contest by applying to its home government for a mail subsidy. The British Government is fully alive to the importance of maintaining the supremacy of her mercantile marine upon the high seas, and is all the more ready in this instance to extend the required assistance, because it is the only British line crossing the Pacific, while its success means the prosperity of an important British railroad connection and the building up of an important traffic with her Canadian colonies. Brought face to face with such rivalry and such competition, the directors of the Pacific Mail Company recognize the supreme importance of at once getting on something like even terms with this new competitor, and hence the resolve to build two new steamers, as mentioned above.

This action of the British Government likewise brings home to the Washington administration what may be the result of the parsimonious interpretation it has adopted of the act of Congress that was passed for the purpose of doing something towards benefiting our merchant marine, while at the same time it furnishes a significant explanation of the reason why American bottoms do not secure and maintain a larger share of the ocean-carrying traffic of the world, and points to the danger we are in of losing what little we have.

Competition can only be successfully fought with its own weapons, and yet we as a nation and a maritime power are endeavoring to ignore this fact, and then complain of our lack of success in competing with our neighbors and rivals. The British Government pays annually $3,500,000 for the transportation of its ocean mails, of which $1,325,000 is paid to the Peninsular and Oriental Company for its India and China service. The German Government subsidizes its steamship lines to the extent of 4,000,000 marks per annum; the French are equally liberal; Austria, Spain, Belgium, and Holland each pay proportionately large amounts, either as direct subsidies to steamship lines or indirectly for mail transportation, while the United States Government appropriates the munificent sum of $325,000 for its ocean mail service, and of this amount barely $50,000 is received by vessels carrying the stars and stripes. If the average Congressman, whose ambition leads him to pose as a statesman, could master the significant importance of these facts, he might be brought to see the suicidal policy that we as a people are pursuing from year to year with respect to the steamship traffic that naturally falls to our lot, but for some reason he is influenced by the clap-trap that is preached by those who forever are harping upon "the raiding of the public purse," "Treasury grabs," "the subsidy lobby," and other unpractical and senseless talk. The cheese-paring policy of the Postmaster-General threatens to deprive us of millions of trade which we might otherwise enjoy, and is actually driving one of the largest of our steamship companies to foreign ship-yards in order to meet the unfair competition of heavily subsidized rivals. These are hard facts which can not be neutralized by argument or sophistry, and we commend them to the consideration of those who are seeking to build up our mercantile marine by carefully constructed theories, while neglecting the more practical and weightier matter of seeing that our laws are properly administered.

My colleague has referred to the fact that Great Britain is establishing naval and commercial stations not only on the Pacific coast, but is surrounding us with a cordon of them. He has alluded to the possible attempts of Great Britain to secure the Sandwich Islands. The question of the future control of the Sandwich Islands is intimately connected with the commerce of the Pacific coast. No man can examine that question and not be satisfied that the United States can not permit the Sandwich Islands to pass under the control of any European power. This is so, not only on account of our commercial and treaty relations, but for a stronger reason, and that is, we can not afford it. If you will examine the map of the Pacific Ocean you will see that the Hawaiian group lies on nearly all the lines of commerce from Australia and Asia to the American continent. As the spokes extend from the hub of a wheel, so the lines of commerce extend from these islands to Valparaiso, Lima, Panama, San Francisco, Victoria, Sitka, Behring's Straits, Japan, Yokohama, Hong-Kong, Singapore, New Guinea, the Caroline Islands, Australia, and New Zealand, giving to them a wonderful strategic position for naval and commercial purposes.

It will be perceived, also, that they lie nearer to our possessions than to those of any other nation, so near, indeed, that their possession by any modern naval power would give that power control not only over our commerce on the Pacific, but over our coastwise commerce as well.

South and west of this group are a number of large islands and numerous groups of smaller ones, nearly if not all of them, the possessions of European powers. I find the struggle to obtain possession of th se islands, and the manner in which they have been partitioned out among the nations of Europe, stated in an article from which I will quote:

During the past few years there has been an extraordinary and growing desire on the part of European powers to acquire territorial possessions in the Pacific Ocean, which may be plainly termed an "annexation fever," and this desire appears to be increasing rather than subsiding. The recent contention for the possession of the island of New Guinea, lying near Australia, raised by the Australian colonies and England with Germany, will not be forgotten. Though the question is not yet definitely settled, it will probably be done amicably by a partition of the island among the claimants. France, already possessed of the Society Islands and New Caledonia, now lays claim to one or two of the Hebrides Islands, and some of the still more important islands of the group west of Tahiti, known as the Leeward Isles, to say nothing of the large island of Madagascar in the Indian Ocean, peopled with four millions of natives.

The recent half-suppressed emeute between Spain and Germany, relative to the ownership of the Caroline Islands in the Central Pacific, which excited an angry, warlike spirit on the part of the Spanish people, and was settled by the arbitration of the Pope, will be remembered by all. The Carolines were awarded to Spain, while the German flag will protect the Marshall Islands. Both these groups lie about 2,000 miles west of Hawaii, in the North Pacific. Germany is also understood to have taken the initial steps which will result in a "protectorate" of Samoa.

The possessions of Great Britain are the following: The continent of Australia, including the magnificent harbors of Sydney and Melbourne; New Zealand, with its fine harbor of Auckland; part of New Guinea, and the Fiji group, with its cluster of two hundred islands, all the foregoing being in the South Pacific. She also holds Hong-Kong and Singapore on the Asiatic coast, and Victoria on the American coast, in all at least eight or ten naval stations of great natural strength and importance. The acquisition by her of Hawaii would render almost impregnable her cordon of naval stations stretching in a straight line from Melbourne on the south to Vancouver Island on the north.

France holds the Society Islands, with their fine harbor of Tahiti, the Marquesas group lying north of Tahiti, some of the Leeward Islands, New Caledonia near Australia, one or two of the New Hebrides Islands, and Hue on the Cochin-China coast.

Germany lays protectoral claim to the Marshall Islands, Samoa, part of New Guinea, and one or two islands near the equator.

Russia holds undisputed possession of the Asiatic coast, from Behring Straits and Kamschatka to Corea and China.

Spain owns the Philippine Islands, with the spacious harbor of Manilla, and about one hundred islands of the Caroline group.

The Dutch Netherlands have long held naval or trading stations in Java, Sumatra, Borneo, and New Guinea.

Portugal owns the Ladrone Islands, with the commodious harbor of Guam, a well-known resort for American whale-ships.

Thus it will be seen that the principal European nations have already secured the strongest strategic points in the Pacific Ocean, where trading, coaling, and naval stations have been or can be located; while the United States does not possess a solitary coaling station beyond her coast line, and is already flanked by strong French, German, and English stations, where, in case of war, she would be compelled to seek the privilege of coaling her ships.

I recently clipped from the Portland, Oregon, Commercial, an article taken from the Glasgow Herald with the caption "Who will control the Pacific?" which shows that however indifferent we may be as to the commercial control of the Pacific, Great Britain is neither indifferent to it nor unaware of its great possibilities, from which I quote the following:

What with land-hunger and trade-hunger it seems as if all the resources of civilization will be exhausted before the dominion of the Pacific is settled.

This, no doubt, is one of the great questions of the not very dim and distant future—Who is to control the Pacific? From the Australasian point of view there can be but one answer to the question, and but one indignant shout of derision at the idea of any doubt on the subject. But with all respect to our antipodean relatives, the Pacific is not confined to the area of waters which wash their shores, and which form the politico-geographical section of the world now known as Melanesia. The Pacific is a very wide term, and it means a very big question, in the settlement of which the scramble for Africa will be small in comparison. It may not be wholly a peaceful settlement, but it will be one which will be chiefly determined by economics rather than by politics. That power will in the future dominate, or at any rate control, the Pacific which can most effectually enfetter it in commercial bonds.

Between Chili and Alaska, between Tasmania and Kamschatka, there are regions which produce in the greatest profusion the most valuable forms of natural wealth. No one power could by any possibility retain political dominion over all that vast area, and no one power can hope to monopolize the trade of it, and trade is now the be-all and the end-all of national existence. The progress of a state is now measured not by the foot-rule, but by the yard-wand, and that country is esteemed the greatest which turns out the largest number of miles of iron rails and of leagues of cotton. In America, at any rate, this seems to be pretty generally believed, and in the United States there evidently exists a growing interest in the consideration of the possibilities affecting the future of the Pacific. An officer of the United States Navy has, indeed, recently published a paper, in which he endeavors to prove that for the next half-century the control of the Pacific will practically depend on the use and ownership of a canal across the neck which unites the northern and southern continents of America. The statement seems rather a large one, but it is not so wild as it appears, and it suggests a number of curious reflections and speculations.

Not the least curious is that the present ownership of the only thing approaching in appearance to a canal is in the hands of a nation which can never by any possibility control the destinies of the Pacific. If, then, M. de Lesseps succeeds in his work, the theory of the American will follow the example of many theories, and refuse to be in unison with fact. But if it is completed, there can be no doubt that the nation which will receive at first the greatest amount of benefit from it will be Great Britain. The United States Bureau of Statistics records that between 1879 and 1886 the number and tonnage of vessels trading from Eastern America and from Europe with the Pacific—both north and south—very nearly doubled; that in the latter year the tonnage was over 4,500,000 tons; and that more than one-half of the whole tonnage was conveyed between Europe and countries other than the United States. It follows, then, that of the Pacific trade generally something like 2,000,000 tons was with the Pacific ports of the United States, and it need hardly be said that this was almost all, if not wholly, conveyed upon foreign, which means practically British, bottoms. Can the most sanguine British trader suppose that this is a condition of things likely to be perpetuated? Already the Americans have convinced themselves that M. de Lesseps's canal will never be completed; but they have only arrived at this conclusion in order to point out a second—that another canal must be constructed by themselves. Now, it is not to be supposed that they will set to work to cut a canal through Nicaragua, or by any other route, in order to benefit Great Britain. The Nicaragua canal may not be undertaken as a national enterprise; but if it is completed by individual effort, as there is now much reason to suppose, it will assuredly receive national support.

Even if the Lesseps canal be completed this is certain to follow, for the traffic between the Pacific and the Atlantic States of the Union is enormous, and will be enormously developed by a shortened sea-route. And, moreover, the cutting of a practicable canal by any route will open up the markets of Western South America and of the Pacific generally to the manufacturers of the Eastern States. It is not to be expected that, with these markets within reach—brought nearer to the traders of New York and Boston and Philadelphia than they will be to those of London and Liverpool and Glasgow—the Americans will tamely submit to be shut out from them by fetters of their own forging. Let us not delude ourselves. If the line of thought be followed up which we have here but suggested, it will be seen that the probabilities of the future are that the struggle for the practical control of the Pacific will be not with France, or Germany, or Russia, but between Great Britain and the United States. It will, however, be a struggle for commercial, not for political control.

We are not likely to disregard the advice of Washington in his farewell address and become involved in the controversies which from time to time arise between the great powers of Europe, or to enter into entangling alliances with foreign nations. In Europe governments may be destroyed and their territory partitioned between neighboring powers, and, remote from the scene of conflict and unaffected by the changes of the map of the Old World, we will pursue our undisturbed career.

The cause of the oppressed across the sea may enlist our sympathies and their treatment arouse our indignation, but true to our policy of a century we will content ourselves with peaceful remonstrances. There may arise controversies between the United States and foreign powers in which, in the interest of peace, we can afford to wait, negotiate, and arbitrate, but if we are to preserve the autonomy of the Sandwich Islands it behooves us, on the first occasion which affords an excuse for it, to announce to the world that we will not permit foreign interference with them, and to be prepared, if the emergency arises to render it necessary, to make our declaration good. Every acquisition of a commanding position near our territories by any foreign power maintaining a large military and naval establishment weakens the security which our hitherto isolated position has afforded us and tends to make similar military and naval establishments necessary for us.

Great Britain maintains a constant warfare for commercial supremacy. She pursues with unrelenting tenacity of purpose her policy of extending her colonial possessions, building up her carrying trade upon the high seas, and extending her commerce. She maintains a great and constantly increasing naval establishment. As has been stated in substance by my colleague to-day, her naval and commercial establishments dot the maps of the world, while her colonial possessions are found upon every continent and in every sea.

The manner in which she extends her territorial or commercial possessions does not concern us, unless in doing so she encroaches upon our commercial or territorial rights, jeopardizes our peace or safety, or infringes upon our well-known policy of non-interference by the European powers with the political affairs of this continent.

Along the line of commerce to India she fortifies the strategic points and controls them. She maintains the mastery of the Mediterranean by her fortifications at Gibraltar, Cyprus, and Malta. By her fortifications she excludes other nations from the Red Sea. But she denies to us the exercise of the same rights which she claims and exercises for the protection of her colonial commerce, by insisting upon a construction of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, which if admitted by us, would prevent us forever from constructing the Nicaragua canal under cessions from the Nicaraguan Government.

As a factor in the development of the great resources of the Pacific coast, building up our coastwise commerce, and enabling the United States to maintain control of the commerce of the Pacific, the Nicaraguan canal, built and controlled by the United States, would be potent and far-reaching. It would pay every year, after it was constructed, more than the cost of its construction, directly and indirectly, to the people of the United States.

It is time that we brush away the cobwebs of diplomacy and grapple with the question of isthmian transit, and solve it in favor of the people of the United States. The canal should be built and controlled by the United States, and it should be commenced as soon as the necessary cessions can be obtained from the Nicaraguan Government.

It is time that we had a well-defined foreign policy known to the world, a policy looking to closer relations with the Central and South American Republics, to the restoration of our merchant marine and the extension of our commerce, and to the prompt protection of the property and personal rights of our citizens upon every land and in every sea.

We can no longer afford, on account of our isolated position, our compact territory, or our peaceful disposition, to have no policy which extends beyond our own borders. We can not afford to allow a foreign policy of acquisition and conquest to be carried to our very doors. If we do, we shall abdicate the position which our power, our influence, our wealth, and our territorial location entitle us to maintain among the nations of the earth.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask for the reading of the educational bill, which is the regular order.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator allow me to have the pending matter disposed of?

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I trust that that committee will find it consistent with their pleasure and duty to give it an early and favorable consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

Mr. BLAIR. Now let the unfinished business be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask for the reading of the bill and the report of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for eight fiscal years next after the passage of this act there shall be annually appropriated from the money in the Treasury the following sums, to wit: The first year the sum of $7,000,000, the second year the sum of $10,000,000, the third year the sum of $15,000,000, the fourth year the sum of $13,000,000, the fifth year the sum of $11,000,000, the sixth year the sum of $9,000,000, the seventh year the sum of $7,000,000, the eighth year the sum of $5,000,000; which several sums shall be expended to secure the benefits of common-school education to all the children of the school age mentioned hereafter living in the United States: Provided, That no money shall be paid to a State, or any officer thereof, until the Legislature of the State shall, by bill or resolution, accept the provisions of this act; and such acceptance shall be filed with the Secretary of the Interior. And if any State, by its Legislature, shall decline or relinquish its share or proportion under this act, or any portion thereof, the sum so relinquished shall go to increase the amount for distribution among the other States and the Territories as herein provided. And any State or Territory which shall accept the provisions of this act, at the first session of its Legislature after its passage, shall, upon complying with the other provisions of this act, be entitled at once to its pro rata share of all previous annual appropriations.

SEC. 2. That such money shall annually be divided among and paid out in the several States and Territories, and in the District of Columbia, in that proportion which the whole number of persons in each who, being of the age of ten years and over, can not write bears to the whole number of such persons in the United States; such computation shall be made according to the census of 1880 until the illiteracy returns of the census of 1890 shall be received, and then upon the basis of that census. And in each State and Territory, and in the District of Columbia, in which there shall be separate schools for white and colored children, the money received in such State or Territory, and in the District of Columbia, shall be apportioned and paid out for the support of such white and colored schools, respectively, in the proportion that the white and colored children between the ages of ten years and twenty-one years, both inclusive, in such State or Territory, and in the District of Columbia, bear to each other, as shown by the said census. The foregoing provision shall not affect the application of the proper proportion of said money to the support of all common schools wherein white and colored children are taught together.

SEC. 3. That the district of Alaska shall be considered a Territory within the meaning of this act; but no acceptance of the provisions of this act, report of the governor of the district, or expenditure by the district for school purposes shall be required; and the money apportioned to said district shall be expended annually, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in the manner provided for the expenditure of other appropriations for educational purposes in said district; and for the purpose of ascertaining the amount to be apportioned to said district the Secretary of the Interior shall ascertain, in such manner as shall be deemed by him best, the number of illiterates therein.

SEC. 4. That no State or Territory shall receive any money under this act until the governor thereof shall file with the Secretary of the Interior a statement, certified by him, showing the common-school system in force in such State or Territory; the amount of money expended therein during the last preceding school year in the support of common schools, not including expenditures for the rent, repair, or erection of school-houses; whether any discrimination is made in the raising or distributing of the common-school revenues or in the common-school facilities afforded between the white and colored children therein, and, so far as is practicable, the sources from which such revenues were derived; the manner in which the same were apportioned to the use of the common schools; the number of white and colored children in each county or parish and city between the ages of ten and twenty-one years, both inclusive, as given by the census of 1880, and the number of children, white and colored, of such school age attending school; the number of schools in operation in each county or parish and city, white and colored; the school term for each class; the number of teachers employed, white and colored, male and female, and the average compensation paid such teachers; the average attendance in each class, and the length of the school term. No money shall be paid out under this act to any State or Territory that shall not have provided by law a system of free common schools for all of its children of school age, without distinction of race or color, either in the raising or distributing of school revenues or in the school facilities afforded: Provided, That separate schools for white and colored children shall not be considered a violation of this condition. The Secretary of the Interior shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the States and Territories which he finds entitled to share in the benefits of this act and also the amount due to each.

SEC. 5. That the amount so apportioned to each State and Territory shall be drawn from the Treasury by warrant of the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the monthly estimates and requisitions of the Secretary of the Interior as the same may be needed, and shall be paid over to such officers as shall be authorized by the laws of the respective States and Territories to receive the same. And that the Secretary of the Interior is charged with the proper administration of this law, through the Commissioner of Education; and they are authorized and directed, under the approval of the President, to make all needful rules and regulations, not inconsistent with its provisions, to carry this law into effect.

SEC. 6. That the instruction in the common schools wherein these moneys shall be expended shall include the art of reading, writing, and speaking the English language, arithmetic, geography, history of the United States, and such other branches of useful knowledge as may be taught under local laws; and copies of all school-books authorized by the school boards or other authorities of the respective States and Territories, and used in the schools of the same, shall be filed with the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 7. That the money appropriated and apportioned under the provisions of this act to the use of any Territory shall be applied to the use of common and industrial schools therein, under the direction of the Legislature thereof.

SEC. 8. That the design of this act not being to establish an independent system of schools, but rather to aid for the time being in the development and maintenance of the school system established by local government, and which must eventually be wholly maintained by the States and Territories wherein they exist, it is hereby provided that no greater part of the money appropriated under this act shall be paid out to any State or Territory in any one year than the sum expended out of its own revenues or out of moneys raised under its authority in the preceding year for the maintenance of common schools, not including the sums expended in the erection of school buildings.

SEC. 9. That a part of the money apportioned to each State or Territory, not exceeding one-tenth thereof, may, in the discretion of its Legislature, yearly be applied to the education of teachers for the common schools therein, which sum may be expended in maintaining institutes or temporary training-schools, or in extending opportunities for normal or other instruction to competent and suitable persons, of any color, who are without necessary means to qualify themselves for teaching, and who shall agree in writing to devote themselves exclusively, for at least one year after leaving such training-schools, to teach in the common schools, for such compensation as may be paid other teachers therein.

SEC. 10. That no part of the fund allotted to any State or Territory under the first section of this act shall be used for the erection of school-houses or school buildings of any description, nor for rent of the same.

SEC. 11. That the moneys distributed under the provisions of this act shall be used only for common schools, not sectarian in character, in the school districts of the several States, and only for common or industrial schools in Territories, in such way as to provide, as near as may be, for the equalization of school privileges to all the children of the school-age prescribed by the law of the State or Territory wherein the expenditure shall be made, thereby giving to each child, without distinction of race or color, an equal opportunity for education. The term "school districts" shall include all cities, towns, parishes, and other territorial subdivisions for school purposes, and all corporations clothed by law with the power of maintaining common schools.

SEC. 12. That no second or subsequent allotment shall be made under this act to any State or Territory unless the governor of such State or Territory shall first file with the Secretary of the Interior a statement, certified by him, giving a detailed account of the payments or disbursements made of the school fund apportioned to his State or Territory and received by the State or Territorial treasurer or officer under this act, and of the balance in the hands of such treasurer or officer withheld, unclaimed, or for any cause unpaid or unexpended, and also the amount expended in such State or Territory, as required by section 9 of this act, and also a statement of the number of school districts in such State or Territory, and whether any portion of such State or Territory has not been divided into school districts or other territorial subdivisions for school purposes, and if so, what portion, and the reasons why the same has not been so subdivided; the number of children of school-age in each district, and the relative number of white and colored children in each district, and of the number of public, common, and industrial schools in each district; the number of teachers employed; the rate of wages paid; the total number of children in the State or Territory, and the total number taught during the year, and in what branches instructed; the average daily attendance and the relative number of white and colored children; and the number of months in each year schools have been maintained in each school district. And if any State or Territory shall misapply or allow to be misapplied, or in any manner appropriated or used other than for the purposes and in the manner herein required, the funds, or any part thereof, received under the provisions of this act, or shall fail to comply with the conditions herein prescribed, or to report as herein provided, through its proper officers, the disposition thereof, and the other matters herein prescribed to be so reported, such State or Territory shall forfeit its right to any subsequent apportionment by virtue hereof until the full amount so misapplied, lost, or misappropriated shall have been replaced by such State or Territory and applied as herein required, and until such report shall have been made: Provided, That if the public schools in any State admit pupils not within the ages herein specified, it shall not be deemed a failure to comply with the conditions herein. If it shall appear to the Secretary of the Interior that the funds received under this act for the preceding year by the State or Territory have been faithfully applied to the purposes contemplated by this act, and that the conditions thereof have been observed, then, and not otherwise, the Secretary of the Interior shall distribute the next year's appropriation as is hereinbefore provided. And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to promptly investigate all complaints lodged with him of any misappropriation by or in any State or Territory of any moneys received by such State or Territory under the provisions of this act, or of any discrimination in the use of such moneys; and the said complaints, and all communications received concerning the same, and the evidence taken upon such investigations, shall be preserved by the Secretary of the Interior, and shall be open to public inspection and annually reported to Congress.

SEC. 13. That on or before the 1st day of September of each year the Secretary of the Interior shall report to the President of the United States whether any State or Territory has forfeited its right to receive its apportionment under this act, and how forfeited, and whether he has withheld such allotment on account of such forfeiture.

SEC. 14. That no State or Territory that does not distribute the moneys raised for common-school purposes equally for the education of all the children, without distinction of race or color, shall be entitled to any of the benefits of this act.

SEC. 15. That the apportionment of the money that shall be appropriated in pursuance of this act for the purposes of education in the Territories shall be upon the basis of the illiteracy therein, as provided in section 2 of this act; but in determining the number of illiterates therein the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to receive and consider, in addition to the census returns of 1880, any evidence that may be submitted to him showing the number of illiterates in any such Territories, and shall determine therefrom, before the first distribution is made, the amount to which such Territory is entitled.

SEC. 16. That there shall be appropriated and set apart, in addition to the sum of $7,000,000 of the first appropriation, the sum of $2,000,000, which shall be allotted to the several States and Territories on the same basis as the moneys appropriated in the first section, which shall be known as the common-school-house fund, to be paid out to each State and Territory at the end of the year on proof of the expenditure made during such year, which shall be expended for the erection and construction of school-houses for the use and occupation of the pupils attending the common schools in the sparsely populated districts thereof, where the local community shall be comparatively unable to bear the burdens of taxation. Such school-houses shall be built in accordance with plans to be furnished free on application to the Bureau of Education in Washington: Provided, however, That not more than $150 shall be paid from said fund toward the cost of any single school-house, nor more than one-half the cost thereof in any case; and the States and Territories shall annually make full report of all expenditures from the school-house fund to the Secretary of the Interior, as in case of other moneys received under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 17. The District of Columbia shall be entitled to all the benefits and subject to all the regulations of this act, so far as applicable under its form of government.

SEC. 18. The power to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby reserved.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment reported by the Committee on Education and Labor will be read.

The SECRETARY. In section 8, line 10, after the word "authority," the committee proposes to insert "including interest money from any source."

Mr. HALE. I wish the Senator in charge of the bill would explain to the Senate just what is covered by that amendment. What sources of revenue to the State are covered by the words he has inserted here?

Mr. BLAIR rose.

Mr. CAMERON. Will the Senator from New Hampshire give way to me, that I may make a motion?

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to know the Senator's purpose.

Mr. CAMERON. I wish to make a motion that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be until Monday.

Mr. BLAIR. No, I do not wish to give way now. I have been waiting, and the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] is waiting for the floor. I hope the Senate will not agree to any motion to adjourn at this time.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Pennsylvania does not propose to move to adjourn now.

Mr. BLAIR. Besides, I think the Senate can well go on to-morrow with the consideration of the educational bill; at least, I shall ask the Senate to do so. I will reply to the Senator from Maine at a more appropriate time. I should like to have the report of the committee now read.

Mr. HALE. The Senator does not propose to take a vote on the amendment at present?

Mr. BLAIR. Not at all.

Mr. HALE. Before that time comes, I hope the Senator will explain it.

Mr. BLAIR. I shall do so. I should like to have the report of the committee read.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be until Monday next.

Mr. BLAIR. It is impossible to hear the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope the Senate will go on with the consideration of the educational bill to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BLAIR. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], but I am informed that the pair does not apply in this case, and I vote "yea."

Mr. CULLOM. I wish to announce that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] on all questions where a pair would be considered necessary. I only mention it because they are absent with the understanding that there is a pair on questions where a pair ought to be enforced.

Mr. RANSOM. The Senator does not wish me to pair on this question?

Mr. CULLOM. No, sir. My colleague [Mr. FARWELL] is paired generally with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA]. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] announced to me before he went away his pair with some Senator, but I really have forgotten who it is. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] is paired generally with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO].

Mr. BUTLER. My colleague [Mr. HAMPTON] is paired generally with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], but I do not understand that it is necessary to insist on the pair, so that the Senator from Massachusetts may vote on this question.

Mr. COCKRELL. Before the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] left I told him I would pair with him; but as I understand he has been paired with another Senator, I suppose the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] expects me to pair with him. We generally pair with each other when he is absent, and on any question where there would be a division I would be paired with him.

Mr. CULLOM. I also desire to announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. DAWES. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina

[Mr. HAMPTON] on all questions which require a pair, but I do not understand this to be one. For that reason I have voted.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] on all political questions. I do not know whether this question has assumed a political aspect, as I have just come into the Chamber, and I shall not vote.

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 10; as follows:

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. BLAIR. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR December 19, 1887:

The Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the bill (S. 371) entitled "A bill to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools," unanimously recommend its passage with the following amendment:

Amend section 8, line 10, by inserting after the word "authority" the following: "including interest money from any source," so that the whole will read, etc.

Although the committee believe that no measure of greater, if there be any of equal, importance will engage the attention of the Senate during the session, they have not deemed it necessary to enter upon a general discussion of the merits of this bill or to enlarge upon the serious nature of the public emergency which requires its enactment into law. The records of the last ten years are replete with exhaustive debates in both Houses of Congress, which, with numerous reports of committees and the general discussion of the subject throughout the country, afford sufficient data for the formation of opinion without more than the statement of a few general considerations at this time.

The original bill providing national aid for the establishment and temporary support of common schools was introduced in the Senate December 6, 1881, during the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress. It was favorably reported by the Committee on Education and Labor, but not acted upon by the Senate during that Congress.

The bill was again introduced early in the Forty-eighth Congress, and being again favorably reported by the Committee on Education and Labor, after a protracted and memorable discussion of several weeks' duration, was passed by the Senate on the 7th day of April, 1884, by a vote of 33 yeas to 11 nays, but failed of consideration by the House of Representatives during that or the following session.

Again the Senate passed the bill during the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, on the 5th day of March, 1886, after an exhaustive debate of three weeks' duration, by an increased majority of 36 yeas to 11 nays. Strenuous efforts were made during both sessions of the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses to secure consideration of the bill and of like measures by the House, which failed.

Your committee again, for the fourth time, report the bill "to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools" favorably to the Senate, and unanimously recommend its passage. The form of the bill remains the same as that in which it was last passed by the Senate, with the exception of a single amendment to the eighth section, made to remove a possible ambiguity of expression.

This measure was devised and has been pressed during these four Congresses to secure the removal of the alarming and increasing evil of illiteracy and its baneful consequences, and not as a means of expending surplus revenues, although their existence removes all excuse for failure to pass it. The evil and the bill are both much older than the surplus, and in the belief of the committee the bill should become a law even if it were necessary to impose additional taxation in order to provide means for the necessary expenditure.

The sum of money required to carry into execution the provisions of the bill will average less than $10,000,000 yearly during its full term of eight years, and each year's expenditure is to be appropriated in the usual manner for the fiscal year during which the disbursement is to be made, so that there is no occasion to set apart a reserve or fund in advance.

If, however, it should be thought wise to set apart from the already accumulated and rapidly increasing surplus of over $100,000,000 the seventy-nine millions which is the total amount of expenditure contemplated during the full eight years' period of proposed expenditure, the money is in the Treasury.

This course, however, is not recommended, as the annual sum required will be less than one-fifth the ordinary expense of the Army and Navy, no more than the usual river and harbor appropriation, not exceeding the cost of two of the great war ships, the building of which is considered a mere trifle and the use of which is problematical, one-eighth the annual payment for pensions, and not more than one-thirtieth of the ordinary expenses of the Government. The annual appropriation for schools contemplated by this bill is of so small an amount that it can not seriously enter into the scheme of any proposed repeal or modification of the revenue laws, and would not be felt in the great mass of the three hundred millions of yearly national expenditure.

The money annually appropriated is to be divided among the several States upon the basis of their relative illiteracy as shown by the census of 1880, that being deemed, on the whole, the best available test of relative necessity as between the States; but when once in possession of the State the expenditure is to be made by the State for the support of common schools in connection with its own school money in such manner as to produce an equalization of common-school advantages to all the children of school age in the State.

Separate schools being the choice of both white and colored citizens in some parts of the country, it is provided in the bill that no discrimination in the use of school money shall exist in favor of either class of pupils.

The gradation of the amount from $7,000,000 in the first year, when it may be reasonably supposed that a smaller sum can be economically utilized than afterward, to $15,000,000 in the third year, and its diminution from that sum $2,000,000 yearly to the last year of the eight years' term, when the expenditure will be $5,000,000 only throughout the entire country, and will not then constitute one-thirtieth of the total expenditure of the country for the support of common schools, and probably not one-tenth of the then expenditure for that purpose in any of the States, will, in the belief of your committee, leave the school systems of all the States and Territories vigorous and wholly self-dependent, so that there will be no occasion for further aid from the General Government. It may be further observed in this connection that the appropriation of not exceeding one-tenth of the amount at the will of the States for the instruction of teachers will provide a body of teachers well qualified for their work, which is the most essential condition of good schools, and with the provision conjointly made by the States from their own funds the establishment of adequate permanent training-schools for teachers in the States for the future will be secured. The small fund provided to assist in building cheap but model school-houses in poor and sparsely settled districts will furnish the whole country with the much-needed pattern after the principles of which every district should copy in time to come.

This is a most beneficial and important feature of the bill.

The necessity for national aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools, which was so startlingly demonstrated by the census of 1870 and by the still more appalling returns of 1880, is proved by the observation and opinions of the great mass of educators and others most competent to testify upon the subject to be increasing and not diminishing.

Here and there improvement is apparent, but the great mass of the illiteracy of the country is untouched. Illiteracy grows with the country and keeps full pace with our general increase.

The increase of population adds continually to the number who require education, while the means of education are not and can not, and therefore will not, be provided without temporary assistance from the funds of the nation, whose general welfare depends upon the intelligence and virtue and the consequent homogeneous diffusion of prosperity and happiness among the whole people. Even if the evil could, after generations of struggle, be overcome by the localities where it chiefly prevails, it is wrong that this rich and powerful nation should withhold the assistance which would remove it within the next ten years.

It must be admitted that intelligence is as indispensable to the continued existence of the nation as to the continued existence of the States, and that the great right of self-defense may be invoked, if it be necessary, to perpetuate the life of both.

Fortunately, the tremendous struggle and sacrifices of that portion of our common country which specially suffers from the consequences of conditions for which the nation was responsible and which are now happily passed away, to educate the children of all classes and races, demonstrate that only a pittance of aid, if seasonably given, and that pittance temporary in its nature, will be required to secure a comprehensive, efficient, and sufficient system of common schools in all the States, forever independent of other than local support.

The entire amount appropriated by this bill is far less per capita than the money distribution by the General Government in 1836, and not one-tenth in value of the great benefactions of public lands to be converted into money upon which rest the public-school systems of the mighty States in the great valley and of the majestic Commonwealths which lie beyond.

Nor should the necessity of equalizing the educational development of our people in connection with the successful solution of the labor and industrial problems, which constitute the most serious of all our public questions, be forgotten; and this aspect of the subject is one which will soon compel the attention of many who now carp at the education bill as an intruder upon the domain of national legislation.

The temporary aid to common schools proposed in this bill should have been given at once upon the close of the civil war. To bestow it now is but to perform a long-deferred obligation, the neglect of which has already greatly enhanced grave perils to the nation.

Every month thousands of illiterate youth are passing beyond the reach of educational influences into the great mass of American citizenship, and cursing the land and the world with their contribution to an ignorant and corrupted sovereignty.

And who shall estimate the evil consequences which will befall us from the continuance of that low and unfortunate motherhood which, under the influence of illiteracy and ignorance, is now bearing one-fourth of the children of the Republic?

Will not the American nation at least give common intelligence to the mothers of the generations yet to be?

If there be no sentiment of patriotism which can stir us to action, the instinct of self-preservation, which confers a certain degree of wisdom upon brutes even, ought not longer to be outraged by our suicidal delay.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, this bill has been long before the country, and has twice passed the Senate by large majorities. Under these circumstances, I have thought it would be a proper thing for the friends of the measure to give way to those who may wish to use their time to oppose it. I understand that the honorable Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] would like to address the Senate at the present time, and I give way to him.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, so much learning and ability have been displayed during past Congresses in the discussion of the provisions of the bill under consideration and of the principles involved in its passage that I can hardly hope to throw any new light on the subject; and yet I feel that it is due to the people of the State I in part represent that I should state some of the reasons why I will vote against its passage.

Before entering upon a statement of these reasons I must say that so much of the purposes of the bill as look to the enlargement of common-school facilities, improved education, and to the increase of knowledge has my most hearty approval, and any measure to promote those purposes which would not involve a violation of the Constitution would command my support. While the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR], the author of this bill, is entitled to great credit for the labor and research he has bestowed on this subject, he is entitled to still greater credit for the humane and noble purpose which he avows of a desire to secure to the illiterate people of impoverished States the advantages of better education and higher civilization. It is not the purpose he would accomplish, but the method he adopts to secure its accomplishment to which I am opposed.

My opposition to this bill is based on the absence of power in Congress to enact such a law; on the fact that its passage would be the adoption of a policy of centralization which would establish a despotism of popular majorities, overthrow the Constitution, and endanger the liberties of the people; because it offers a bribe in money to the people to sacrifice their manhood and self-reliance and to surrender their constitutional government in consideration of the paternal care of a master whose ultimate cruelty we may not now be able to estimate; and because it would be the surrender of our birthright for a mess of pottage.

I do not wish to see the American people surrender that sturdy self-reliance which has characterized them from the first settlement of the American colonies to the present time, nor to see them demoralized and degraded by any system of subventions from the Government which would deprive them of the independent and resolute purpose to take care of themselves without pecuniary aid from the Federal Government.

This bill would have other important effects upon the public interests, to which I am opposed, whether they are sought to be accomplished by the Senator from New Hampshire and other friends of the bill or not. Among these would be the use of the public moneys to carry out the purpose of this bill as a pretext for perpetuating a high protective tariff and to prevent a reduction of the great burdens of taxation now imposed on the people, and by the same means to aid in the perpetuation of the national debt and our present system of national banking. While I mention these two objects as important, and in themselves sufficient to control my vote against this bill, I do not propose to discuss them now. My principal objection to it rests upon the still higher grounds just mentioned.

CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTION CONSIDERED.

I deny the constitutional power of Congress to pass such a law. Under our system of dual government, where the people are sovereign, and where they are the government-making power, and where they have conferred such powers as pleased them on the State and Federal governments, respectively, and retained to themselves such powers as they chose not to confer on either, it is as necessary for the law-making power under either of these governments to inquire into its jurisdiction when attempting to legislate as for courts of justice with special or limited jurisdiction to inquire into their jurisdiction when they come to adjudicate a case.

We should never lose sight of the fact that in this country the people are sovereign; that they delegated to the Federal Government such powers, and such only, as to enable it to deal with other governments foreign to ours, that is, to control our international policy, and such as to enable it to deal with our Federal and interstate relations, covering such subjects as relate to the interest of the whole Union, such as were necessary for the welfare and safety of the whole people, and as could not with propriety and advantage be exercised by the several States. Such as the power—

To lay taxes, duties, imposts, and excises.
To borrow money on the credit of the United States.
To regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the States, and with Indian tribes.
To establish a uniform rule of naturalization, and uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States.
To coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures.
To provide for the punishment of counterfeiting the securities and current coin of the United States, etc.

Such were the powers our fathers thought it necessary and wise to confer on Congress.

And after conferring these powers they provide by the tenth amendment to the Constitution that—

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively or to the people.

The people for their own protection reserved some powers which they refused to confer upon either the State or Federal Government.

The vast residuum of powers, not delegated by the Constitution to the Federal Government and not reserved to the people, are conferred on the several State governments. These embrace, among many others, the power to regulate the acquisition, control, and ownership of property; the providing security for life, person, and property; the management of the estates of deceased persons, embracing the power to regulate the descent and distribution of estates, and the making of wills; the power to regulate marriage and divorce; the power to make all police regulations necessary for the good of society; the power to organize courts of justice for the enforcement of the laws of the State; the power to levy and collect taxes to support the State government, etc.; in a word, the power to regulate and control the local and domestic interests of the people, as contradistinguished from the powers necessary to carry out our Federal and foreign relations.

We are told by Mr. Justice Story, section 906, in his Commentaries on the Constitution, a work confessedly of the highest authority, that—

The Constitution was, from its origin, contemplated to be the frame of a national government, of special and enumerated powers, and not of general and unlimited powers.

He says further in the same paragraph that—

If the clause "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States" is construed to be an independent and substantive grant of power, it not only renders wholly unimportant and unnecessary the subsequent enumeration of specific powers, but it plainly extends far beyond them and creates a general authority in Congress to pass all laws which they may deem for the common defense and general welfare. Under such circumstances the Constitution would practically create an unlimited national government. The enumerated powers would tend to embarrass and confuse, since they would only give rise to doubts as to the true extent of the general power or of the enumerated powers.

And in section 907 he says:

For what purpose could the enumeration of particular powers be inserted, if these and all others were meant to be included in the preceding general power? Nothing is more natural or common than first to use a general phrase and then to qualify it by a recital of particulars. But the idea of an enumeration of particulars which neither explain nor qualify the general meaning, and can have no other effect than to confound and mislead, is an absurdity which no one ought to charge on the enlightened authors of the Constitution. It would be to charge them either with premeditated folly or premeditated fraud.

This strong language of a great judge and law writer ought to be repeated as many times as attempts are made by Congress, such as the passage of the bill under consideration, to usurp the rights of the States, to overthrow the Constitution of the United States, and to make a centralized government to take the place of the Federal system of government provided by the Constitution.

If I may be pardoned, I will here make a digression from this particular line of argument so far as to state that I am of opinion no government of so great territorial extent as the United States, and with such a great variety of interests, could long be perpetuated as a centralized republic. Such territorial extent and varied interests can be harmonized only under a federal republic like ours or under a monarchy. In a centralized republic of such territorial extent, population, and interests there would always be a majority and a minority section. And whether the majority should be situated in the north, the south, the east, or the west, the people of the majority section would claim the political advantages which their majority assured to them, and would demand the adoption of policies oppressive to the minority section, and their political representatives would, as a rule, insist on the adoption of such policies as a means of securing and preserving popular favor. This would inevitably lead to discontent, angry strife, and in the end to political turmoil and revolution. Hence in my view the great importance of maintaining inviolable our present Federal system as marked out by the Constitution of the United States.

Returning to the consideration of the question as to the unconstitutionality of the bill under consideration, I cite again from Story on the Constitution, section 436, language, which quotes approvingly from the Federalist, as follows:

An entire consolidation of the States into one complete national sovereignty would imply an entire subordination of the parts, and whatever powers might remain in them would be altogether dependent on the general will. But as the plan of the convention aims only at a partial union or consolidation, the State governments would clearly retain all the rights of sovereignty which they before had and which were not by that act exclusively delegated to the United States.

The precise test as to the power of Congress is stated by Mr. Story, section 1238, as follows:

Whenever, therefore, a question arises concerning the constitutionality of a particular power, the first question is whether the power is expressed in the Constitution. If it be, the question is decided. If it be not expressed, the next inquiry must be whether it is properly an incident to an express power and necessary to its execution. If it be, then it may be exercised by Congress. If not, Congress can not exercise it.

Under what express grant of power are we to pass this bill "to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools" in the States of the Union? Can any one point to the grant of power? I take it no one will attempt to do so. If this can not be done, to what "express grant of power is it an incident and necessary to its execution?" Will any Senator who favors the passage of this bill answer these questions?

The tenth amendment to the Constitution, already quoted, declares that—

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively or to the people.

Judge Story, commenting on this amendment, section 1900, says:

This amendment is a mere affirmation of what, upon any just reasoning, is a necessary rule of interpreting the Constitution. Being an instrument of limited and enumerated powers, it follows irresistibly that what is not conferred is withheld and belongs to the State authorities, if invested by their constitutions of government respectively in them; and if not so invested, it is retained by the people as a part of their sovereignty.

Speaking further of this amendment, section 1901, he says:

Its sole design is to exclude any interpretation by which other powers should be assumed beyond those which are granted. All that are granted in the original instrument, whether express or implied, whether direct or incidental, are left in their original state. All powers not delegated, and not prohibited, are reserved.

In further comment on this amendment, in the same paragraph, he says:

> One would suppose, if the history of the human mind did not furnish abundant evidence to the contrary, that no reasonable man would contend for an interpretation founded neither in the letter nor in the spirit of an instrument. Where is the controversy to end, if we desert both the letter and the spirit? What is to become of constitutions of government, if they are to rest, not upon the plain import of their words, but upon conjectural enlargements and restrictions to suit the temporary passions and interests of the day? Let us never forget that our constitutions of government are solemn instruments, addressed to the common sense of the people, and designed to fix and perpetuate their rights and liberties. They are not to be frittered away to please the demagogues of the day. They are not to be violated to gratify the ambition of political leaders. They are to speak in the same voice now and forever. They are of no man's private interpretation. They are ordained by the will of the people, and can be changed only by the sovereign command of the people.

This splendid passage is at once inspiration, prophecy, and warning, which should not be disregarded by those who wish well of the Republic.

This brings me to consider, in the light of the provisions of the Constitution and canons of construction which I have quoted, the report of the Committee of the Senate on Education and Labor, made during the Forty-ninth Congress, reviewing and indorsing the report made by the same committee on the same bill during the Forty-eighth Congress. In that report the committee say, among other things, or rather the chairman of the committee says (for he declares that "as a matter of argument the committee as a whole is not responsible" for the report):

> We propose to inquire into the nature and extent of the power and obligations of the National Government to assist in the education of the people when necessary for its and their own preservation.

With all respect for the honorable Senator who prepared the report, I venture the statement that this is one of the most extraordinary papers which ever emanated from the American Senate, in its bold and utter disregard of the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, of all the recognized rules of its interpretation, and of the character, genius, and traditions of our Government. As this report may be supposed to embody the strongest arguments in favor of the passage of the bill under consideration, it is proper to inquire briefly into their value and merits.

We may ascertain hereafter whether those members of the committee who are absolved from responsibility for the report, and others who favor the passage of this extraordinary bill, have been able to give other and better reasons than those contained in this report in favor of its passage.

The author of this report says:

> Our leading proposition is that the General Government possesses the power and has imposed upon itself—

Not that it is required by the Constitution, but that it has imposed on itself—

> the duty of educating the people of the United States whenever, for any cause, those people are deficient in that degree of education which is essential to the discharge of their duty as citizens either of the United States or of the several States wherein they chance to reside.

This remarkable statement of the "leading proposition," as stated by the honorable chairman of the committee, in favor of the passage of this bill, at one bound, without constitutional warrant (as I expect to be able to show), and without reason or authority to sustain it, and in violation of the theory of our Government and in disregard of our political traditions, would overthrow the great distinctive difference between our theory of the sovereignty of the people and the theory of the monarchies of the Old World, that the king or emperor is the sovereign source of political power. It would make this grand eleemosynary establishment, formerly known as the Government of the United States, the supreme and the sole judge of what is needful for the welfare of the people. In reference to our political system it would make the pyramid stand upon its apex. It would treat the States and the people as dependent on the will of the Federal Government in all matters in which it might determine that "whenever, from any cause," they failed to come up to the standard of qualifications and duty which Congress regards as the correct one the Federal Government can of right intervene and remedy the supposed evil.

Our political theory is that the Government derives its powers from the consent of the governed; that the people are the sovereign source of political power; that they delegated such of their sovereign power as seemed to them best to the Federal Government, and such portion of it as they thought best to the several States, retaining to themselves such rights as they were unwilling to commit to the control of either of these governments. If there is no express grant of power to Congress to pass such a bill as this, and if the passage of such a bill is not necessary as a means of executing some expressly granted power, then it can only be passed for the reason that the Federal Government is the sovereign source of political power and may do what it pleases without reference to the wishes and consent of the several States or of the people. To do this would be to overthrow the Constitution, to destroy the rights of the States, to disregard the will of the people, to change the character of our Government from that of a free, constitutional republic to a despotism of centralized majorities, and in effect to deny the capacity of the people for self-government.

The control of merely local and domestic questions by Congress would, in a large measure, destroy the direct accountability of the representatives to their constituents by removing them too far from the observation of the people, and would thus open the way for reckless, improper, and prodigal legislation.

Already by loose constructions of the Constitution and by usurpations of power the jurisdiction of Congress has become so extended as to render it difficult for it to pass the required laws. Up to a quarter of a century ago it was a rare thing for a session of Congress to pass more than a half dozen general laws outside of appropriation bills. Now, by these extensions of jurisdiction, we pass a considerable volume of laws at each session. If we adopt the principle which underlies this educational bill, that Congress may do whatever it supposes the general welfare to require, then a perpetual session of Congress will not give sufficient time for the passage of such laws as may be called for. The result would necessarily be that Congress would have to delegate very extensive powers to the heads of departments of the Government, and that we should adopt a system of personal government, not resting on the popular will and controlled by just legal provisions, but leave the interests of the public and the rights of the people to the discretion and at the mercy of Cabinet officers, not selected by the people and too far removed from them to be under any direct responsibility to them. This would be the very essence of despotism; it might be just and mild, or arbitrary, harsh, and unjust, according to the character of the officer. Do honorable Senators feel prepared to go further than we have heretofore gone, as the passage of this bill will require us to do, in assuming that the "general welfare" clause of the Constitution is a grant of power, and in centralizing the powers of this Government, in destroying the rights of the States as they exist under the Constitution, in changing the character of our Government, and in sacrificing the liberties of the people?

The paragraph I have quoted from the report of the committee speaks of the duty which the Government of the United States had "imposed on itself." It has imposed no constitutional duty on itself, and can impose none. It derives its power by delegation from the people, and can lawfully exercise no other power than that which is so derived. The Government did not create itself nor did it prescribe its own powers.

I shall now copy a few other passages from this report, showing the reasons upon which it is proposed to pass this bill, and illustrating the doctrine by which our constitutional system of government is to be overthrown. In that report it is said:

> But the right to educate the children throughout the nation is the right to preserve the Government and the nation. That right can not be curtailed. It is geographically coextensive with the jurisdiction of the Government itself, and self-preservation compels its exercise by the National Government whenever there is failure for any reason on the part of the parent or the State.

This is the new method of establishing the powers of the Federal Government to which the attention of Senators is invited.

The constitutional Government of the United States has now been maintained in peace and war for nearly one hundred years. It has exhibited a growth in population and wealth and advancement in all the elements of civilization surpassing any other country in the world, ancient and modern. During nearly one-half of this time, and when the foundations of its greatness were being laid, there were no free public schools in any part of the country. The men who fought the battles of the Revolution and the men who framed our grand and wonderful Constitution of Government had none of the advantages of free public schools. I believe such schools were unknown then; and still our people did not go into barbarism and our Government did not perish.

Again that report says:

> But Congress has express power to provide for the general welfare of the United States, and to exert its utmost power of taxation to promote that which was one of the six greatest ends enumerated in the preamble, and to secure which the Constitution itself was ordained and established by the whole people of the United States of America.

I need hardly say that the preamble to the Constitution is no more a grant of power than the caption of an ordinary act is a part of the law. And no respectable authority can be cited to show that it is a grant of power. Mr. Justice Story, whom I have so often quoted, says, section 462:

> And here we must guard ourselves against an error which is too often allowed to creep into the discussions upon this subject. The preamble never can be resorted to to enlarge the powers confided to the General Government or any of its departments. It can not confer any power per se; it can never amount by implication to an enlargement of any power expressly given. It can never be the legitimate source of any implied power when otherwise withdrawn from the Constitution.

And again that report says:

> If in the past the National Government has not borne its due proportion of the burdens of the education of the people, or if new conditions have arisen which require of it a degree of co-operation with the several States not hitherto necessary in securing to all citizens of the Republic that degree of intelligence which is indispensable to the safety of society and to the happiness of the individual, who is at once the subject and the sovereign of both local and national administration, then the time has come for a new departure, and the withes of straw must yield to the expanding limbs of the giant who is arousing himself for the labors of the time which has already come.

As the writer of that report makes no allusion to the necessity of amending the Constitution so as to accomplish his purpose, we may fairly infer that the Constitution of the United States is the "withes of straw" which must yield to his wishes on this subject. This idea is in harmony with the whole report. How do the supporters of the bill under consideration and the friends of education like that suggestion? Are they ready to adopt it?

I will give one more sample extract from that report. It is:

Laws are silent in war. They were silent in the conflict through which we have just passed. But what is meant by this? Not that all laws are silent; but that minor regulations which appertain to more quiet times are suspended in the overmastering presence of the great first law of self-preservation. In this sense, which is the true sense, laws may become silent in peace as well as in war. We are now in peace, but if there be laws which forbid education to the illiterate millions of the American people by the outstretched arm and bursting Treasury and innumerable intellectual and moral agencies of the nation at large, then those laws should, and, in the presence of the uprising sentiment of the people, I may say, they shall, be silent in this land until by the diffusion of knowledge and of the power which knowledge gives to every child within our borders peace may be made perpetual.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator will allow me to say that in the report—I had no idea the Senator knew of it, as the report was made in a former Congress—there is a disclaimer of responsibility on the part of the committee for the argument, which was prepared wholly by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. REAGAN. I suppose my honorable friend did not observe that in a former part of my remarks I stated that fact.

Mr. BLAIR. I have been absent from the Chamber and was not aware of the fact that the Senator had mentioned that circumstance.

Mr. REAGAN. If there be any law or laws in any part of the United States which forbid the education of the illiterate millions, I have no knowledge of where they are to be found; and I suppose the hypothetical suggestion of that report on this point to be baseless. The only law which it is necessary to silence in order to secure the passage of the proposed bill, and to secure the carrying out of its policy, is the Constitution of the United States. I do not know whether it was the intention of the author of the report to urge a lawless disregard of the Constitution in order to carry the proposed measure, but I submit, in all candor, that such seems to be the meaning and effect of this extraordinary report.

This school bill contemplates taxing the people to the extent of $79,000,000 to be applied to common-school education in the States. Where is the grant of power for the levying of such a tax to be found?

Article I, section 8, clause 1, of the Constitution provides that—

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises—

For what purpose?

to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

I have already shown that the "general welfare" clause is not a grant of power. The sum of money proposed to be expended is not to pay debts, nor is it for the common defense. Where, then, is the power to be found which would authorize the levy of such a tax?

The report of the committee recommending the passage of this bill assumes that, under the "general welfare" clause of the Constitution, Congress may "exert its utmost power of taxation." That is, that it may determine outside of constitutional authority for what purpose it will impose taxes on the people, and then it may oppress them by taxing to the utmost of its power. This doctrine is monstrous. And again, where do Senators find the power to tax the people of Illinois for the purpose of educating the people of Texas, or the people of Ohio to educate those of Mississippi, or those of Massachusetts to educate the people of South Carolina?

I assume that Congress can only lawfully levy and collect taxes and appropriate money to carry out the purposes for which the Federal Government was established, and that to promote education in the States was not one of these purposes.

On this point I quote from page 108 of Cooley on Taxation, a book of great merit, by an author whose book on Constitutional Limitations is of the highest authority, as follows:

GRADE OF THE GOVERNMENT WHICH TAXES.

In considering the legality of the purpose of any particular tax, a question of first importance must always concern the grade of the government which assumes to levy it. The "public" that is concerned in a legal sense in any matter of government is the public the particular government has been provided for; and the "public purpose" for which that government may tax is one which concerns its own people, and not some other people, having a government of its own, for whose wants taxes are laid. There may, therefore, be a public purpose as regards the Federal Union which would not be such as a basis for State taxation, and there may be a public purpose which would uphold State taxation, but not the taxation which its municipalities would be at liberty to vote and collect. The purpose must in every instance pertain to the sovereignty with which the tax originates; it must be something within its jurisdiction so as to justify its making provision for it. The rule is applicable to all the subordinate municipalities; they are clothed with powers to accomplish certain objects, and for those objects they may tax, but not for others, however interesting or important, which are the proper concern of any other government or jurisdiction. State expenses are not to be provided for by Federal taxation, nor Federal expenses by State taxation, because in neither case would the taxation be levied by the government upon whose public the burden of the expenses properly rests. To provide for such expenses would, consequently, not be a purpose in which the people taxed would, in a legal sense, be concerned.

I must also beg the indulgence of the Senate while I read at some length the opinion of Mr. Madison, who is often called the father of the Constitution, on this subject:

Mr. MADISON. It is supposed by some gentlemen that Congress have authority not only to grant bounties in the sense here used, merely as a commutation for drawback, but even to grant them under a power by virtue of which they may do anything which they may think conducive to the general welfare. This, sir, in my mind raises the important and fundamental question whether the general terms which have been cited are to be considered as a sort of caption or general description of the specified powers, and as having no further meaning and giving no further powers than what are found in that specification, or as an abstract and indefinite delegation of power extending to all cases whatever, to all such at least as will admit the application of money, which is giving as much latitude as any government could well desire.

I, sir, have always conceived—I believe those who proposed the Constitution conceived—it is still more fully known and more material to observe that those who ratified the Constitution conceived—that this is not an indefinite government, deriving its powers from the general terms prefixed to the specified powers, but a limited government, tied down to the specified powers, which explain and define the general terms.

It is to be recollected that the terms "common defense and general welfare" as here used are not novel terms first introduced into this Constitution. They are terms familiar in their construction and well known to the people of America. They are repeatedly found in the old Articles of Confederation, where, although they are susceptible of as great a latitude as can be given them by the context here, it was never supposed or pretended that they conveyed any such powers as is now assigned to them. On the contrary, it was always considered clear and certain that the old Congress was limited to the enumerated powers, and that the enumeration limited and explained the general terms. I ask the gentlemen themselves whether it was ever supposed or suspected that the old Congress could give away the money of the States in bounties to encourage agriculture, or for any other purpose they pleased. If such a power had been possessed by any body, it would have been much less impotent, or have borne a very different character from that universally ascribed to it.

The novel idea now annexed to those terms and never before entertained by the friends or enemies of the Government will have a further consequence, which can not have been taken into the view of the gentlemen. Their construction would not only give Congress the complete legislative power I have stated; it would do more, it would supersede all the restrictions understood at present to lie in their power with respect to a judiciary. It would put it in the power of Congress to establish courts throughout the United States, with cognizance of suits between citizen and citizen, and in all cases whatsoever.

This, sir, seems to be demonstrable; for if the clause in question really authorized Congress to do whatever they think fit, provided it be for the general welfare, of which they are to be the judge, and money can be applied to it, Congress must have power to create and support a judiciary establishment with a jurisdiction extending to all cases, favorable in their opinion to the general welfare, in the same manner as they have power to pass laws and apply money providing in any other way for the general welfare. I shall be reminded, perhaps, that according to the terms of the Constitution the judicial power is to extend to certain cases only, not to all cases. But this circumstance can have no effect in the argument, it being presupposed by the gentlemen that the specification of certain objects does not limit the import of the general terms. Taking these terms as an abstract and indefinite grant of power, they comprise all the objects of legislative regulations, as well such as fall under the judiciary article in the Constitution as those falling immediately under the legislative article, and if the partial enumeration of objects in the legislative article does not, as these gentlemen contend, limit the general power, neither will it be limited by the partial enumeration of objects in the judiciary article.

There are consequences, sir, still more extensive, which, as they follow clearly from the doctrine combated, must either be admitted, or the doctrine must be given up. If Congress can employ money indefinitely to the general welfare, and are the sole and supreme judges of the general welfare, they may take the care of religion into their own hands; they may appoint teachers in every State, county, and parish, and pay them out of their public Treasury; they may take into their own hands the education of children, establishing in like manner schools throughout the Union; they may assume the provision for the poor; they may undertake the regulation of all roads other than post-roads; in short, everything, from the highest object of State legislation down to the most minute object of police, would be thrown under the power of Congress; for every object I have mentioned would admit of the application of money, and might be called, if Congress pleased, provisions for the general welfare.

The language held in various discussions of this House is a proof that the doctrine in question was never entertained by this body. Arguments wherever the subject would permit have constantly been drawn from the peculiar nature of this Government, as limited to certain enumerated powers, instead of extending, like other governments, to all cases not particularly excepted. In a very late instance—I mean the debate on the representation bill—it must be remembered that an argument much used, particularly by gentlemen from Massachusetts, against the ratio of 1 for 30,000, was that this Government was unlike the State governments, which had an indefinite variety of objects within their power; that it had a small number of objects only to attend to, and, therefore, that a smaller number of Representatives would be sufficient to administer it.

Arguments have been advanced to show that because, in the regulation of trade, indirect and eventual encouragement is given to manufacturers, therefore Congress have power to give money in direct bounties, or to grant it in any other way that would answer the same purpose. But surely, sir, there is a great and obvious difference, which it can not be necessary to enlarge upon. A duty laid on imported implements of husbandry would, in its operation, be an indirect tax on exported produce; but will any one say that by virtue of a mere power to lay duties on imports Congress might go directly to the produce or implements of agriculture or to the articles exported? It is true, duties on exports are expressly prohibited; but if there were no article forbidding them, a power directly to tax exports could never be deduced from a power to tax imports, although such a power might indirectly and incidentally affect exports.

In short, sir, without going further into the subject, which I should not have here touched at all but for the reasons already mentioned, I venture to declare it as my opinion that were the power of Congress to be established in the latitude contended for it would subvert the very foundations and transmute the very nature of the limited government established by the people of America; and what inferences might be drawn or what consequences ensue from such a step it is incumbent on us all to consider.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator be so kind as to give the date of this extract from the writings of Mr. Madison?

Mr. REAGAN. It occurred in the early period of the Government, in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. BLAIR. In 1791?

Mr. REAGAN. I have not the date precisely.

Mr. BLAIR. It was in reference to a bounty upon the fisheries, was it not?

Mr. REAGAN. A friend sitting near me tells me that it was in 1791.

Mr. BLAIR. That was my recollection; and it was subsequently disclaimed by Mr. Madison himself.

Mr. REAGAN. Not the general principles enunciated.

If reason and weight of authority can settle any question, the two authorities just quoted would seem to settle conclusively the question that Congress can not under the authority of the Constitution appropriate money to carry out the purposes of this bill to establish and support common schools in the States.

Have Southern Senators so soon forgotten the horrors of the so-called reconstruction of the Southern States, when the Constitution and laws were silent, and the people there were only permitted to hear, to suffer, and to obey the commands of the military, that they are ready for a few million dollars to take from those they represent the protecting shield of the Constitution, and subject them to the capricious will, the prejudices, and the avarice of a popular majority of the American people? Do they forget that they are representing the weaker section of the Union? That their people need and demand protection, equality of rights, and liberty more than they do money?

I can not speak for others, but if I were to vote for the passage of this bill, with my convictions as to the powers of Congress under the Constitution, I should feel that to secure to the State of Texas the paltry sum of about $4,000,000, to be paid in installments, during a period of eight years, I had voted to abrogate, to annul the Constitution of the United States, the sheet-anchor of our liberties, the bond which binds together what should be a perpetual Union, of what should be indestructible States, resting on the will and authority of the freest, most prosperous, and most happy people as a whole on the face of the earth.

CONGRESS MAY APPROPRIATE LAND, BUT IT CAN NOT TAX THE PEOPLE FOR EDUCATIONAL PURPOSES.

It has been assumed in argument by many Senators, that because Congress had granted lands for educational purposes it could also grant money for the same purpose. If Congress had granted lands for this purpose in the absence of the necessary authority, such precedents would not justify the passing of other unconstitutional acts. If precedents are to take the place of constitutional grants of power, then we might as well regard the Constitution as abrogated, for precedents not warranted by its provisions may be found all along through the history of the Government. There would be no more wisdom or justice in such an assumption than for us to conclude that the bad acts of our private lives should serve as precedents to excuse or justify other bad acts, and relieve us from any obligation to obey the moral law and the precepts of Christianity.

But there are other answers to this assumption that the giving of lands justifies taxing the people to give money for educational purposes in the States. The Government lands are held in trust by it for the benefit of the whole American people, and it is simply discharged from that trust pro tanto when it surrenders portions of them to aid in the cause of education. And in all cases, I believe, when public lands or money the proceeds of the sales of public lands have been so appropriated, their use and application have been controlled by the several States and Territories by their own laws and agents. If the Federal Government should attempt to follow its land grants into the State, and to administer them there, that would also violate the Constitution, but for a different reason than for taxing the people for the purpose specified in this bill. The appropriations of land have been absolute, without provisions for reversion to the United States after the titles vested, and wholly freed from Federal control. Congress does not undertake to go into the States with its laws and its agents to administer the land so appropriated, or the proceeds of the sales of such land, nor to require the governors of States and other State officers to conform their action in the use of such lands to the requirements of Federal laws, nor to report their proceedings to any Federal officer for his approval or disapproval. And, beside this, under Article IV, section 3, clause 2 of the Constitution, Congress has plenary and unlimited power to dispose of the public lands, while taxes can only be levied by the Federal Government to carry out the purposes for which it was established, as I have tried to demonstrate. This distinction, it seems to me, is conclusive against the power of the Federal Government to levy and collect taxes to support schools in the States; and also against the assumption that because Congress has granted lands to promote education in the States it can tax the people and raise and appropriate money for the same purpose.

ANALYSIS OF THE BILL.

The case is entirely different with the bill under consideration. The people are to be taxed to raise the $79,000,000. Federal officers are to be appointed to examine and supervise the reports from all of the thirty-eight States and nine or ten Territories. The people are to be taxed in addition to cover the cost of collecting the above sum, and for the payment of the salaries, etc., of the required officers and clerks. And in a large measure the money is to be collected from the people of some of the States for the benefit of the people of other States. It would be more equitable, and much less expensive, for the citizens of each State to pay the taxes to support their own schools, and to collect those taxes by their own officers and off their own subjects of taxation.

Instead of giving this money to the several States and Territories, to be administered by them, as in the case of the public lands given for a like purpose, this bill provides in its first section that—

No money shall be paid to any State, or to any officer thereof, until the Legislature of the State shall, by bill or resolution, accept the provisions of this act; and such acceptance shall be filed with the Secretary of the Interior.

The State must first accept the bribe. It must then, by bill or resolution, solemnly ratify an unconstitutional act of Congress. And then it must crown its self-accepted infamy by filing such bill or resolution with the Secretary of the Interior.

The fourth section of the bill evinces so clearly the complete subordination in which the States are to be held to the Federal laws and authorities that I shall quote all of it down to the proviso, as follows:

SEC. 4. That no State or Territory shall receive any money under this act until the governor thereof shall file with the Secretary of the Interior a statement, certified by him, showing the common-school system in force in such State or Territory; the amount of money expended therein during the last preceding school year in the support of common schools, not including expenditures for the rent, repair, or erection of school-houses; whether any discrimination is made in the raising or distributing of the common-school revenues or in the common-school facilities afforded between the white and colored children therein, and, so far as is practicable, the sources from which such revenues were derived; the manner in which the same were apportioned to the use of the common schools; the number of white and colored children in each county or parish and city between the ages of ten and twenty-one years, both inclusive, as given by the census of 1880, and the number of children, white and colored, of such school age attending school; the number of schools in operation in each county or parish and city, white and colored; the school term for each class; the number of teachers employed, white and colored, male and female, and the average compensation paid such teachers; the average attendance in each class, and the length of the school term. No money shall be paid out under this act to any State or Territory that shall not have provided by law a system of free common schools for all of its children of school age, without distinction of race or color, either in the raising or distributing of school revenues or in the school facilities afforded.

No comment is necessary to expose its purpose.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator allow me to ask him if he is willing that the proviso be printed in connection with what he has already read?

Mr. REAGAN. I have not put the proviso in.

Mr. BLAIR. Would the Senator object to it? It seems to modify the meaning somewhat.

Mr. REAGAN. If the Senator chooses to read it, I have no objection.

Mr. BLAIR. The proviso goes on:

Provided, That separate schools for white and colored children shall not be considered a violation of this condition. The Secretary of the Interior shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the States and Territories which he finds to be entitled to share in the benefits of this act, and also the amount due to each.

Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question at this point?

Mr. REAGAN. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. The proposition which he is advocating is that here is an interference on the part of the General Government with the sovereignty of the State.

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir; with the State authority.

Mr. BLAIR. Or the authority of the State. As I have understood, and as I think the friends of the bill construe this section and all other provisions of like character in the bill, it is simply a specification of conditions upon which the State may or may not take the money as it sees fit. There is no requirement that a State shall take the money; but if it does accept its proportion of the entire fund it accepts it upon the same conditions that are applicable in all other States. But it may leave it alone; it is not obliged to take it. There is no interference unless the State by affirmative action by its Legislature accepts and demands it.

Mr. REAGAN. The section goes down into the States, takes hold of State officers, directs how they shall do and what they shall report. I leave that question with Senators for their consideration.

The fifth section of the act contains the following:

And the Secretary of the Interior is charged with the proper administration of this law, through the Commissioner of Education; and they are authorized and directed, under the approval of the President, to make all needful rules and regulations, not inconsistent with its provisions, to carry this law into effect.

That is, to carry a Federal law into effect within the States, and relating to a question of local State policy, the education of the children of these States.

It provides in the sixth section what studies shall be taught in State schools in which the State furnishes the houses, pays the general expense of administering the law, and at least one-half the current expense for instruction proper, as follows:

That the instructions in common schools wherein these moneys shall be expended shall include the art of reading, writing, and speaking the English language, arithmetic, geography, and history of the United States.

It then graciously adds:

And such branches of useful knowledge as may be taught under local laws.

So the Federal law will not even trust the States to prescribe the course of study for their children.

But this delectable section proceeds:

And copies of all school-books authorized by the school boards or other authorities of the respective States and Territories, and used in the schools of the same, shall be filed with the Secretary of the Interior.

Why? Is there a purpose in this? If not, why is it put in the bill? If there is, why is it not expressed? The study of the history of the United States is one of the branches to be taught. There are several school histories of the United States. The last section of this bill provides that—

The power to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby reserved.

Is it the intention that if the histories of the United States are not such as are approved by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Education this act shall be so amended as to enable them to prescribe what history of the United States shall be taught? Some of the school histories of the United States contain matter which some of the Senators supporting this bill would not like to have taught to their children. Let them beware what they are doing. And do they think that their Legislatures and States and school officers are unequal to the task of prescribing a course of studies for public common schools? If not, why consent to the impertinent intrusion by a Federal law of a direction as to what studies shall be taught our children? And why demand the inspection of our school-books? Such was the policy of Russia towards the Poles in prohibiting the use of the Polish language in schools after the conquest of Poland. Such was the policy of Austria with Hungary, whose people, up to a recent date, were not permitted to educate their children in their own language, and now only in their primary schools, but were required to adopt the language of their conquerors and masters. The same policy was pursued by Germany after the conquest of Alsace-Lorraine, in which province, as I am informed, the French population were required to be instructed in books of history which eulogized the Germans and vilified the French.

The eighth section of the act provides as follows:

That no greater part of the money appropriated by this act shall be paid out to any State or Territory in any one year than the sum expended out of its own revenues, or out of moneys raised under its authority, including interest money from any source, in the preceding year, for the maintenance of common schools, not included in the sums expended in the erection of buildings.

If there are people who suppose they will be relieved from taxation for school purposes by the proposed subvention, the reading of this section will cure them of that belief.

Section 10 provides—

That no part of the fund allotted to any State or Territory under the first section of this act shall be used for the erection of school-houses or school buildings of any description, nor for rent of the same.

The sixteenth section, however, provides for the appropriation of $2,000,000, to be divided among the several States and Territories, for the construction of school-houses, under the following conditions prescribed by that section:

Such school-houses shall be built in accordance with plans to be furnished free on application by the Bureau of Education at Washington: Provided, however, That not more than $150 shall be paid from said fund towards the cost of any single school-house, nor more than one-half the cost thereof in any case.

So it is seen the people in the several States and Territories are not to be trusted with the planning and building of cheap country school-houses, when they furnish at least half the money to pay for their construction, and when they have to be built under plans submitted by the Bureau of Education. This bill goes on to provide that—

The States and Territories shall annually make full report of all the expenditures from the school-house fund to the Secretary of the Interior, as in case of other moneys received under the provisions of this act.

For what purpose? To what end? What necessity is there, if it is not in connection with other provisions of the bill, to dwarf and degrade the States, and to prepare the people for a centralized Republic, a despotism of majorities?

The twelfth section of the act shows that it is intended to subordinate completely the State authorities to the Federal authorities, and that the law shall be administered by Federal officials. If this is not so, why require a detailed statement from the governor of everything which is to be done in the State to the Secretary of the Interior? This section of the act is so important that I read it in its entirety:

SEC. 12. That no second or subsequent allotment shall be made under this act to any State or Territory unless the governor of such State or Territory shall first file with the Secretary of the Interior a statement, certified by him, giving a detailed account of the payments or disbursements made of the school fund apportioned to his State or Territory and received by the State or Territorial treasurer or officer under this act, and of the balance in the hands of such treasurer or officer withheld, unclaimed, or for any cause unpaid or unexpended, and also the amount expended in such State or Territory, as required by section 9 of this act, and also a statement of the number of school districts in such State or Territory, and whether any portion of such State or Territory has not been divided into school districts or other Territorial subdivisions for school purposes, and if so, what portion, and the reasons why the same has not been so subdivided; the number of children of school age in each district, and the relative number of white and colored children in each district, and of the number of public, common, and industrial schools in each district; the number of teachers employed; the rate of wages paid; the total number of children in the State or Territory, and the total number taught during the year, and in what branches instructed; the average daily attendance and the relative number of white and colored children; and the number of months in each year schools have been maintained in each school district. And if any State or Territory shall misapply or allow to be misapplied, or in any manner appropriated or used other than for the purposes and in the manner herein required, the funds, or any part thereof, received under the provisions of this act, or shall fail to comply with the conditions herein prescribed or to report as herein provided, through its proper officers, the disposition thereof, and the other matters herein prescribed to be so reported, such State or Territory shall forfeit its right to any subsequent apportionment by virtue hereof until the full amount so misapplied, lost, or misappropriated shall have been replaced by such State or Territory and applied as herein required, and until such report shall have been made: Provided, That if the public schools in any State admit pupils not within the ages herein specified, it shall not be deemed a failure to comply with the conditions herein. If it shall appear to the Secretary of the Interior that the funds received under this act for the preceding year by the State or Territory have been faithfully applied to the purposes contemplated by this act, and that the conditions thereof have been observed, then, and not otherwise, the Secretary of the Interior shall distribute the next year's appropriation as is hereinbefore provided. And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to promptly investigate all complaints lodged with him of any misappropriation by or in any State or Territory of any moneys received by such State or Territory under the provisions of this act, or of any discrimination in the use of such moneys; and the said complaints, and all communications received concerning the same, and the evidence taken upon such investigations, shall be preserved by the Secretary of the Interior, and shall be open to public inspection and annually reported to Congress.

Why require the governors to certify to the Secretary of the Interior a detailed account of the payments and disbursements made of this school fund, unless for the purpose of having the fund administered under the direction of Federal officers? And how are the governors to comply with this requirement and that of the fourth section? How much time and how many clerks will be necessary to enable them to comply with the requirements of these sections? Can any Senator guess? And here let me suggest that in view of the very vastness of the appropriation of public funds proposed by this bill Senators seem to have forgotten the smaller but still very large appropriations which will have to be made from year to year for the clerical force, both here and in the States, necessary to carry out its provisions.

And the Secretary of the Interior is required to promptly investigate all complaints of misappropriation of these moneys and of any discriminations in the use of such moneys. Knowing the negro character as I do, I will venture to predict that if this section becomes law the Secretary of the Interior will not be able to investigate all the complaints which will come to him under it. An ignorance for which they should not be held responsible and suspicions which arise partly from that ignorance and partly from their social position, coupled with a knowledge that they can appeal to a power which they believe to be unfriendly to the Southern whites, will no doubt bring a vast number of frivolous and unjust complaints to the Secretary for investigation and open a new and rich field for sectional agitation.

The best people of both races in the South are anxious to promote harmonious relations between the whites and blacks, and gratifying progress has been made in that respect. But my belief is if this bill shall become a law it will disappoint the philanthropic hopes and expectations of both Northern and Southern Senators who are supporting it, and reopen a Pandora's box, to pour out anew upon the Southern States the ills they have suffered so much from, but which have been less grievous during the last few years. I have no desire to be a prophet of evil, but it may be better to avoid than to suffer what must in the nature of things flow from the passage of such a law as this would be.

EDUCATION IN THE SOUTHERN STATES.

The passage of the bill under consideration has been urged by some Senators and accepted by others because of the exceptional condition in which some of the States were left as the result of the late civil war; because by it about eight million slaves were made free people and were invested with the rights and privileges of citizenship, which they were not, as a rule, qualified to exercise intelligently; and because by it the States in which most of them reside were greatly impoverished.

We must all recognize the great force of this philanthropic desire to enlighten so large a number of citizens who are in so great need of the knowledge which is necessary to enable them to understand and to perform the duties of citizenship and to take care of their own personal rights. And so strongly do I sympathize with this view that nothing less than the fear of subverting our form of government and endangering the liberty of both races could induce me to oppose its being carried out by some such law as the one now proposed.

It is true that at the close of the late civil war the Southern States were utterly impoverished and in a large measure desolated. Their social and industrial systems, which came down to them through the traditions of the ages, and had been secured to them by constitutional provisions and by legal enactments, were utterly destroyed, at a sacrifice to them of thousands of millions of dollars, and rich and poor alike were involved in almost universal bankruptcy. Their school systems and educational institutions were in abeyance. They were without means to sustain them, and education languished.

I do not mention these things to complain of them now. They were in a large measure the result of causes for which the generation which suffered from them was not responsible, and they are buried in the irrevocable past. But I mention them for the purpose of contrasting the educational condition in those States now with what it was then; to show that the interests of education are not being neglected there, and that that country is not in the danger from illiteracy which some of the friends of this bill seem to suppose.

I do not propose to go fully into this subject. But I make the general statement that all the Southern States have now fully organized systems of free public schools in operation, sustained by the revenues of those States, in which all the children of scholastic age receive instruction, the white and black children having equal benefits from the common schools. Private schools, colleges, and universities have also been restored to active usefulness and are now generally in successful operation, and normal schools for the education of both white and black teachers, sustained at public expense, are now in successful operation in some of the Southern States. The school funds of most of those States are not yet sufficient to afford tuition for as many months in the year as is desirable; but these funds are annually increasing, and the organization of the school systems is being perfected as fast as the sparseness of settlements in some portions of them will permit.

The State common-school funds in some of these States, perhaps in most of them, are being supplemented by local taxation in school districts, which is provided for by law, so that in very many districts free schools are kept n operation for six, eight, and ten months in the year. I have not the means of knowing how much money in the aggregate is raised by local taxation for free-school purposes in these States, but suppose the sum to be very nearly equal to the State appropriations.

I think no one who is familiar with the condition and progress of education in the Southern States will question the general accuracy of the statement I am making of it. So it will be seen they are not in so deplorable a condition as to call for very extraordinary measures for their relief in this respect.

As tending to show the progress of education in the free common schools of that section of the Union, I submit a statement of the annual income of the several States for this purpose where there is the greatest amount of illiteracy, which has grown out of the enfranchisement of the black population. The statement is for the year 1884–'85, which is the last year for which such a statement has been made out:

|---|---|---|---|
| Alabama | $511,510 | North Carolina | $631,904 |
| Arkansas | 931,404 | South Carolina | 515,580 |
| Florida | 335,984 | Tennessee | 1,330,850 |
| Georgia | 690,372 | Texas | 1,661,476 |
| Louisiana | 571,139 | Virginia | 1,050,860 |
| Maryland | 1,758,585 | West Virginia | 957,150 |
| Mississippi | 872,320 | | |
| Missouri | 4,232,073 | Aggregating | 16,051,207 |

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him? Judging from the statement made of the schools of Mississippi alone, I will say that the State taxation of Mississippi for common schools does not amount to the sum mentioned there by a very large deficit.

Mr. REAGAN. As to that I do not know. It is not mentioned in the report, and there is nothing in the report of the Secretary of the Interior to indicate that local taxation is embraced in the current school fund. But the Senator must know better than I do about the State of Mississippi, of course.

Mr. GEORGE. I venture to assert that not one of the Southern States mentioned by the Senator from Texas appropriates the sum specified out of the State treasury, independent of local taxation.

Mr. REAGAN. The Senate will understand that it is not very pleasant to be interrupted, but I will say to the Senator that I have taken the statements from the executive document to which I called attention. The figures are reported by the Secretary of the Interior on the authority of the Commissioner of Education, and I leave the question between the Senator and those authorities.

Mr. GEORGE. I will state for the information of the Senator——

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Texas will allow me, my colleague [Mr. BATE], who has just retired from the office of governor of Tennessee, says to me that from the treasury of that State, the $1,300,000 named by the Senator from Texas was appropriated independently.

Mr. REAGAN. I am taxing the Senate, and I shall decline to yield to further interruption. I have submitted the document upon which I made the statement and Senators can comment on it to their satisfaction hereafter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DAVIS in the chair). The Senator from Texas declines to yield.

Mr. REAGAN. Since taking the foregoing statement from the report of the Secretary of the Interior, from House of Representatives Executive Document No. 1, part 5, first session Forty-ninth Congress, I have received the following letter from Hon. M. J. Durham, First Comptroller of the Treasury, which shows that the current common-school fund for the last scholastic year for the State of Kentucky amounted to $1,247,798.40, which added to the foregoing aggregate makes the total of the current school fund for the Southern States about $17,299,005 for the year 1884–'85, and for the State of Kentucky 1886–'87:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 3, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Referring to our conversation of yesterday, I will say that I do not find the governor's message as full upon the school question in Kentucky as I supposed it was, but I can give you a general statement about it. We have a general system of common-school education in Kentucky, and it is supported by interest upon a fund that has been derived from various sources, amounting to something over a million and a half of money, and in addition to that there is a tax of 22½ cents levied upon the taxable property of the State for the support of common schools; and the amount derived from interest on the fund and taxes for the year just closed is $1,247,798.40, being a per capita of $1.90 to each child between the ages of six and sixteen. There is no distinction made in this fund between white and colored children. The system is a reasonably fair one in Kentucky. As a matter of course, local taxation in the various districts amounts to a very considerable sum, but to just how much I am not able to state.

Very truly, yours,

M. J. DURHAM.

Hon. JOHN H. REAGAN,
United States Senate.

This, it will be seen, makes a very respectable showing for those States under the circumstances. And these figures would be much more imposing if the sums voted by local communities could be added to them, and if we were able to show the sums expended in the construction of school-houses, and for education in private schools, in normal schools, and in the colleges and universities of those States.

What I have said will, I trust, show that there is no reason for the Southern States to be regarded as mendicants, seeking alms at the hands of their more prosperous neighbors; that there is no reason to fear that liberty will be lost and that our Government and institutions will perish because of the illiteracy of their children; that no facts exist which should induce their people to surrender their State autonomy and with it their manhood and self-reliance. Much less is there reason for them to consent to the overthrow of our constitutional Republic, and for them to consent to the adoption of a centralized despotism of majorities, which means the entire subordination of the interests of the minority section to those of the majority section of the country.

WHAT IS EDUCATION?

What is learned in the schools is not all there is of education. The schools aid in the acquisition of knowledge; but much of real education is acquired in the family circle, on the farm, in the workshop, in public assemblages, in court-houses, at the hustings, and in the churches. And there is probably not a Senator here who has not known men of superior intelligence who could neither read nor write. And the universal experience in this country is that even among the illiterate class there is a great deal of practical intelligence and many useful citizens. In the discussion of this bill we seem to lose sight of these great facts, and to proceed on the principle that the knowledge necessary to good citizenship can only be acquired in the school-house. Would it not be as well for us on this as on other questions to consult common sense and our every-day experience? I saw, when a boy, in the Charleston (S. C.) Mercury a very interesting paper on the subject of "Atmospheric knowledge and the education of the blood." I have not forgotten the impression it made on me. Our whole lives are a school. All our surroundings are school-masters. And a person with natural faculties can hardly be raised in this country without practical knowledge enough to make a comfortable living and to understand the principal duties of citizenship. Of course I have reference to the free people. Such was not the case, as a rule, with the slave population. But now that they are free and invested with the rights of citizenship, it will as well apply to them; if, as we hope may be the case, they are capable of the intellectual development which a few of them have shown and which characterizes the Caucasian race.

The people of the section where the most of them live mean to make a fair and faithful trial of their capacity to this end; and they need no promptings from others as to the demands of duty and interest in this respect. Investigation would probably develop the fact that outside of the black population, whose condition is exceptional, there are more educated fools than there are illiterate people not qualified to take care of their own interests. I do not make these suggestions to undervalue scholastic education, for I recognize fully its importance, but to call to mind facts which should not be lost sight of in considering the capacity of our people for self-government, and to show that we are not in so great danger on account of illiteracy as seems to be supposed by some Senators.

CONDITION OF EDUCATION IN TEXAS.

I can not speak with as full information of the progress which is being made in the matter of education in other States, but I submit a letter from the comptroller of public accounts of the State of Texas, to show what is being done in that State:

OFFICE OF THE COMPTROLLER,

Hon. JOHN H. REAGAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

DEAR SIR: In reply to yours of the 20th instant I give you below a statement regarding the school fund of Texas, which I presume is the information desired by you.

The investment of the permanent school fund of Texas is as follows, to wit:

|---|---|
| Texas State bonds | $2,048,000 |
| County bonds | 2,263,000 |
| Railroad bonds | 1,753,000 |
| Cash uninvested | 220,000 |
| Total | 6,284,000 |

There are about 25,000,000 acres of land donated by the State to the permanent fund, that are yet unsold.

The annual interest due upon sales of lands belonging to said fund is about $650,000.

In addition to the income from the above-named investments, an annual advalorem tax of 12½ cents on the $100 valuation of property, and a poll tax of $1, are levied and collected and one-fourth of all occupation taxes collected is appropriated for the purpose of supplementing said income.

The apportionment made by the board of education for the support of the public schools for the present scholastic year amounts in round numbers to $2,300,000. It is estimated that school districts and cities supplement the State fund about $800,000 by local taxation, and by investments held by the school fund of the counties.

The University of Texas has now an annual income of about $50,000, with a permanent fund of $544,000 in Texas State bonds, besides her lands that are unsold.

The Agricultural and Mechanical College has an annual income of $22,000.

There was appropriated by the last Legislature $100,000 for the support of the Deaf and Dumb and Blind Institutes for this year.

Respectfully,

JNO. D. McCALL,
Comptroller.

P. S.—In reply to your telegram just received I give you below the total taxable values of this State from 1880 to 1887, inclusive; the other questions I think have already been answered in the letter.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1880 | $311,470,736 | 1884 | $603,060,917 |
| 1881 | 357,000,000 | 1885 | 621,011,989 |
| 1882 | 419,925,476 | 1886 | 630,525,123 |

From this it is seen that the permanent common-school fund in Texas, in money and land, is perhaps greater than that in any other State in the Union, or than in any other country in the world; and that the current available fund for the present scholastic year amounts to $2,300,000, to which is to be added the $800,000 derived from local taxation, making the current school fund of the State for the scholastic year amount to about $3,100,000.

The permanent university fund of $544,000 is supplemented by very large land grants, with an available fund for current use of $50,000, while the Agricultural and Mechanical College has an annual income of $22,000. And there is also a liberal support by the State to two normal schools, one for the education of white, and one for the education of colored teachers.

This statement shows the progress made since 1884–'85 in education as well as in the taxable property of the State, when the available school fund of that State was $1,661,476.

It may be that others of the Southern States are not as fortunately situated as Texas in this respect. But that they are all as earnestly engaged in the promotion of the cause of education I think is undoubtedly true; and that they will succeed in the establishment of good systems of free common schools, which will meet the necessities of their people, without Federal aid, I do not doubt.

The desire for the education of the black population is not a mere matter of sentiment with the people of the Southern States, nor is it a political hobby by which they expect to gain or to retain political power in the Federal Government. The people of that section are influenced on that subject by far higher and nobler purposes. The negroes constitute a considerable part of their communities. They are invested with freedom and citizenship; and the interests of all of both races require that they should be qualified for these to them new duties, in order to secure the promotion of the welfare of all.

Mr. VEST obtained the floor.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator from Missouri has the floor for the purpose of making a speech, I ask him to give way to allow us to have a brief executive session.

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. I desire to make a short statement of fact in immediate connection with the statistics given by the Senator from Texas, which I think would be interesting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask the Senator from Missouri to yield to me perhaps two minutes, or five at the outside.

Mr. VEST. Certainly. All I want is to take the floor on the bill for Monday.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Missouri give way so that I may have printed in the RECORD the names of the Democratic Senators of this body in the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses who supported this bill? That is all I want to put in the RECORD.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator also print the names of those who voted against the bill, of whom I am one?

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator give way or not? Will you answer that question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly. All I want is to keep the floor for Monday.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask unanimous consent to offer at this time an amendment to the bill in order that it may be printed. I offer a substitute for section 2 of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire to have it read?

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read at the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. Strike out section 2 and insert:

SEC. 2. That such money shall annually be divided among and paid out in the several States and Territories, and in the District of Columbia, in proportion to their population respectively, according to the census of 1880: Provided, That all of said money remaining undistributed at the date of the publication of the returns of population, as shown by the census of 1890, shall be divided as aforesaid in proportion to the population according to said census of 1890.

Mr. GEORGE. By the kindness of the Senator from Missouri, I am allowed to put on record the names of the Democratic Senators who have supported this bill on the two occasions when it was passed by this body. They are as follows:

Messrs. BERRY, BLACKBURN, BROWN, CALL, CAMDEN, COLQUITT, EUSTIS, GARLAND, GEORGE, GIBSON, HAMPTON, JACKSON, JONAS, JONES of Florida, JONES of Arkansas, KENNA, LAMAR, PAYNE, PUGH, RANSOM, VANCE, VOORHEES, and WALTHALL, numbering 23.

The number of Democratic Senators who have voted against the bill in the two last Congresses is 13. Their names are also here and may be printed in the RECORD:

Messrs. BAYARD, BECK, BUTLER, COKE, COCKRELL, GRAY, GROOME, HARRIS, MAXEY, MORGAN, PENDLETON, SAULSBURY, and WILSON of Maryland.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question? Of course he must have some purpose in thus repeating what is already in the RECORD. I ask him if he is afraid any of them will get away before another vote on the bill?

Mr. GEORGE. My purpose is to bring that fact to the attention of the public in connection with the speech of the Senator from Texas. The fact is found through several volumes of the RECORD, and is not accessible to the public at large.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I desire, with the consent of the Senator who has the floor, to read, in connection with the remarks of the Senator from Texas, a letter which I find in the Texas Iron News of December 31, 1887, the title of which is "Teachers and school fund—County Treasurer Rowell speaks." The letter is as follows:

TEACHERS AND SCHOOL FUND—COUNTY TREASURER ROWELL SPEAKS.

Editor Texas Iron News, Jefferson, Tex.:

DEAR SIR: You will confer a favor by publishing the following extract, reported to the Fort Worth Gazette from Austin, December 21, 1887:

"Complaints from school-teachers throughout the State are coming to the department concerning their non-payment. On inquiry it is learned that the State now owes the teachers a total sum approximating $900,000, which she is unable to pay, and will be unable for some time to come. As a consequence the teachers throughout the State are forced to discount vouchers and coupons, often at ruinous rates, and to Shylocks who glory in speculating on hard-run teachers."

Further on is given as causes for this state of affairs "droughts and other disasters, and cutting off of payment of interest and other revenues from school lands." Whatever the cause or causes may be, they should as far as possible be remedied by the next Legislature, as it is certainly a very great hardship on teachers not to be able to realize within 10 per cent. of the face value of their vouchers. Teachers often, not knowing the cause of this delay in payment of their vouchers, blame the county treasurers for it. They think perhaps the county treasurers are using for their own private purposes money that ought to be paid to them. I have been unable to account for this long delay of payments satisfactorily to myself. It is now near the end of the fourth month of the scholastic year, and this county has not received one cent of her pro rata of the available school fund, and when she will receive it I can not say. I have written to the comptroller in regard to it several times, and once to the State treasurer, and the only information I get is that there is no money there for school purposes, that they do not know when there will be, and that it will be paid out to the counties to which it belongs as fast as it arrives. My advice to teachers is to investigate for themselves, and to organize and present this matter to the next Legislature in such a shape as to command attention. If they do not, county treasurers will be compelled to do so in self-defense.

R. E. ROWELL.

He appears to be one of the county treasurers. I do not desire to make any comment upon that, but to read in connection with it a letter just received from a son of Albert Sidney Johnston, William Preston Johnston, president of the Tulane University, of Louisiana. I need not say what the Senators from Louisiana, and all Senators in the body undoubtedly know, that there is no more eminent educator in the country, and no man who can speak of the condition of education in the South probably as well as Mr. Johnston. He addresses a letter to me dated New Orleans, December 31, 1887, and which is as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, December 31, 1887.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of December 24, asking my opinion of the actual condition of education in this section, and suggesting my attendance in Washington to assist in presenting the claims of the people to national aid to education, has been received. I regret that the exacting nature of my duties will prevent me from going to Washington, but I am very glad to assure you of my hearty approval of the Blair bill, as it now stands, and of my earnest wish for its success. I have advocated it with pen and voice, and regard it as the most important measure to the Southern States now before Congress.

In regard to the educational condition of this State, and of the South, I can only say that there is no argument in favor of the Blair bill which has been urged in the past that does not receive confirmation and additional cogency in the present condition of affairs. Without doubt there has been a great advance in the material prosperity of the South in the last few years, but much of the enhanced energy and enlarged means of our people has been turned toward the rehabilitation of their fortunes. A broader and deeper feeling for the advancement of education has been evoked by the untiring efforts of its friends. It seems to me that all has been done that was possible with the means and agencies at command. But in spite of a widening interest in education and a success adequate to the effort made, there has been a relative loss in our educational status. We are retrograding instead of advancing. Unless we are able to make a stand, to rally the forces of society, and lift the ignorant classes of the South from barbarism and degradation, the experiment of a republican democratic government must be a failure among us. I can not now see any better solution to the question than that offered by the Blair bill, and the narrowness of its opponents, especially in the South, fills me with amazement.

The governor of this State, the Hon. S. D. McEnery, in an address in August, 1885, urged the education of the masses "to the proper understanding of the rights and duties of citizenship, the functions of government, and the appreciation of free institutions;" adding, "I am safe in saying that not one-half of the voting population of Louisiana have any knowledge whatever of these subjects, yet they are eligible to the highest office in the State, sit as jurors, and determine questions affecting property, liberty, and life."

In this city, which is more favorably situated than the rest of the State, the prospect is very disheartening. In 1858 the public schools received $253,699; in 1887, only $171,000. While the population has increased 54 per cent., the appropriations for the schools have diminished 32 per cent. The school board reports December 13, 1887, as follows: "We believe it is well known to all intelligent citizens of New Orleans that our public schools have received inadequate support; that our school-houses are insufficient in number and size; that many of them are unattractive, dilapidated, and even in some cases unsafe. It is well known also that our able and faithful teachers are poorly and irregularly paid. It is, too, generally believed that this state of affairs is the natural and inevitable result of the poverty of our city." And this, though in this city there is a large special fund, the donation of John McDonogh, which is employed in aid of school buildings.

In a report adopted last night by the school board of this city occurs the following language:

"Should the appropriation be fixed at the same figures as last year, the result will be most disastrous, if not absolutely ruinous, to the efficiency of the schools.

"We have no balance from funds to fall back upon, as we had last year, and the present financial outlook is extremely discouraging to any true friend of public education."

In this I quite agree, as with the budget presented by the council, there will be a reduced efficiency. If in the great contest with the forces of darkness, ignorance, and barbarism we suffer a defeat now, it will postpone the day of regeneration for our people many a long year. You, at least, Mr. Senator, will have nothing to reproach yourself with in this matter. * * *

I am, very respectfully, yours,

WM. PRESTON JOHNSTON.

Hon. HENRY W. BLAIR,
United Sta'es Senate, Washington, D. C.

I call attention to these statements of fact.

Mr. REAGAN. The Senator will allow me to say that I was advised that some person had sent to a gentleman in the other House the paper which has been read, and requested that it should be delivered to the Senator from New Hampshire. What could have given rise to that paper, I do not know. I understand that the collection of taxes in what is called the "drought district" of Texas, which has suffered very greatly from drought, has been for a time suspended. Possibly that may have been the cause of the failure to collect; but that does not answer another proposition which is made in the letter, that the writer has repeatedly called on the comptroller, who advised him that there was no money in the treasury. I have read the official statement of the comptroller, dated the 28th of December, showing that there are $2,300,000 in the treasury to the credit of the school fund; and I leave the statement of the comptroller, made officially, as the answer to the statement of that gentleman that there is no money in the treasury.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eighteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 9, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 5, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of so much of the Journal as enumerates the list of bills introduced and referred on yesterday.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The remainder of the Journal was read and approved.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER laid before the House, under the rule, bills of the Senate of the following titles; which were severally read twice, and referred as follows, namely:

The bill (S. 261) to amend the law concerning the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

The bill (S. 106) to establish two additional land offices in the State of Colorado—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Joint resolution (S. R. 6) for the removal of all political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States upon Abram C. Meyers—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. MAFFETT, by reason of sickness.

INTRODUCTION OF PRIVATE BILLS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is asked to call the attention of members again to the fact that numbers of private bills are placed in the petition-box without having indorsed upon them the name of the members presenting the same. In all such cases, of course, the Clerk is unable to enter them upon the Journal and furnish a list to the official RECORD for publication, as required by the rule. Gentlemen will do well to inquire at the Clerk's desk and ascertain whether their bills are properly indorsed.

PRESERVATION OF FORESTS.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3239) for the preservation of the woods and forests of the national domain adjacent to the sources of the navigable rivers and their affluents in the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

DUTY ON IMPORTED WOOL.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR, by unanimous consent, also introduced a bill (H. R. 3240) to restore the rates of duty on imported wool; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS TO CERTAIN SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR, by unanimous consent, also introduced a bill (H. R. 3241) granting pensions to soldiers and sailors confined in Confederate prisons; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

POLYGAMY.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR also, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 45) for the amendment of the Constitution of the United States in regard to polygamy and polygamous association, or cohabitation between the sexes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL-BANK LIENS.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3242) to authorize national banks to take liens upon real estate for advances or loans of money; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

OVERPAYMENT OF DUTY.

Mr. COLLINS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3243) to amend section 3013 of the Revised Statutes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

MARINE SIGNAL BOARD.

Mr. COLLINS, by unanimous consent, also introduced a bill (H. R. 3244) to establish a board by the name of "The Marine Signal Board of the United States," with a view of having adopted a code and system of marine lights and fog signals, and regulating the same; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

SALARIES OF JUDGES, NEW YORK.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next. My object in making this motion is to give the committees time to organize, to select their clerical force, and, if possible, to prepare business for the beginning of the week, so that we may now go promptly to work on matters of public concern.

The motion was agreed to.

IMPRISONMENT OF COUNTY COURT JUDGES.

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw my objection to the introduction of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE].

The resolution was read, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. It is as follows:

Whereas it is alleged in the public prints and elsewhere, that John F. Tandy, Albert Hoyt, and S. C. Peden, judges of the county court of St. Clair County, Missouri, are now confined in the common jail of Cole County, Missouri, and have been so confined for more than one month, on the order of the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Missouri; and

Whereas the imprisonment of said county judges is based upon the following facts, namely: That the said circuit court of the United States, on April 23, 1887, issued its writ of mandamus to said county judges, commanding them to levy a tax on all property in said St. Clair County, for the purpose of raising a fund sufficient to satisfy a certain judgment, theretofore rendered in said circuit court against said county; to which writ said county judges made answer and return to the effect that they could not obey the writ, for the reason that they had no authority under the laws of the State of Missouri to levy the tax, and that any attempt to do so would subject them to a criminal prosecution and heavy punishment under the laws of the State; which return was true in substance and effect; notwithstanding which, the said circuit court quashed the return, attached said county judges for contempt, and committed them to jail, there to remain until they should acknowledge themselves willing to levy the tax according to the mandate of said circuit court, or until the further order of said court; and

Whereas the arrest and imprisonment of these judicial officers of the State, under the circumstances detailed, is a gross usurpation of judicial power on the part of the Federal circuit court, and a dangerous menace to every just form of local government: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary is hereby instructed to investigate the facts touching the imprisonment of said county judges, and to report by bill or otherwise, at the earliest day practicable; and to this end the said Committee on the Judiciary is hereby authorized and empowered to send for persons and papers, and to take whatever steps may be necessary to a proper and complete investigation of said alleged imprisonment; and to pay the expense thereof, the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of the contingent fund of the House.

SESSION CLERKS FOR COMMITTEES.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Accounts be instructed to report to the House on Monday next the apportionment of the session clerks provided for by law.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve an objection.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I was going to ask the gentleman from Indiana why he offers the resolution in this form, instructing the Committee on Accounts as to their action in this matter.

Mr. MATSON. I think, Mr. Speaker, it is quite important that the clerks should be apportioned to the committees promptly in order that the business of the House may proceed. Between now and Monday there certainly ought to be ample time to make this apportionment, which seems to be a mere matter of form, as I apprehend that there will be hardly any departure from the apportionment heretofore existing. It is important to the House to have the matter settled, and I think the committee may as well report on Monday as at a later time.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I simply wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that the Committee on Accounts have had no opportunity to meet to consider this subject.

Mr. MATSON. This resolution certainly implies no reflection on the committee, because everybody knows that they have not had an opportunity to act in this matter.

Mr. ROGERS. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the resolution be again reported.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. OATES. I move to amend the resolution so as to instruct the Committee on Accounts to report a clerk for each committee not provided by law with an annual clerk. I remember well that in the last Congress we consumed a good deal of time in debating and considering propositions for clerks for several of the committees which were not provided for by law, until at last we gave clerks to them all, and I think we shall save time by voting to do that now. If a subject is important enough to have a committee appointed to consider it, I certainly think the committee ought to have a clerk.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. OATES, and the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. OATES. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 60, noes 86.

Mr. OATES. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point that no quorum has voted. The Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON].

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLS. I now move that the House adjourn.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Pending the motion to adjourn,

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication, of the 23d ultimo, from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting a draught of a bill "to provide for the reduction of the Round Valley Indian reservation, in the State of California, and for other purposes," with accompanying papers relating thereto. The documents thus submitted exhibit extensive and entirely unjustifiable encroachments upon lands set apart for Indian occupancy, and disclose a disregard of Indian rights so long continued that the Government can not further temporize without positive dishonor. Efforts to dislodge trespassers upon these lands have in some cases been resisted upon the ground that certain moneys due from the Government for improvements have not been paid. So far as this claim is well founded the sum necessary to extinguish the same should be at once appropriated and paid. In other cases the position of these intruders is one of simple and barefaced wrong-doing, plainly questioning the inclination of the Government to protect its dependent Indian wards and its ability to maintain itself in the guaranty of such protection.

These intruders should forthwith feel the weight of the Government's power. I earnestly commend the situation and the wrongs of the Indians occupying the reservation named to the early attention of the Congress, and ask for the bill herewith transmitted careful and prompt attention.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 5, 1888.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn is withdrawn. The tellers will take their places, unless gentlemen agree to postpone this matter.

Mr. MATSON. I ask to withdraw the resolution I have offered, as I am satisfied, now that the attention of the Committee on Accounts has been called to this matter, there will be prompt action.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the resolution will be regarded as withdrawn.

There was no objection.

CLAIM OF FLORIDA.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3255) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle and pay the claim of the State of Florida on account of expenditures made in suppressing Indian hostilities, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

LIFE-SAVING STATION, SAUGATUCK, MICH.

Mr. FORD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3256) providing for the establishment of a life-saving station at the harbor of Saugatuck, Mich.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

LIFE-SAVING STATIONS.

Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3257) to establish additional life-saving stations; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

POSTAGE ON FOURTH-CLASS MATTER.

Mr. GROUT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3258) to reduce the postage on fourth-class matter; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

APPOINTMENT OF POSTMASTERS.

Mr. GROUT, by unanimous consent, also introduced a bill (H. R. 3259) to enable the people to name their postmasters; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ALCOHOLIC LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Mr. GROUT, by unanimous consent, also introduced a bill (H. R. 3260) providing for the appointment of a commission on the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, and ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS.

Mr. GROUT, by unanimous consent, also introduced a bill (H. R. 3261) for the relief of Union soldiers who were confined in Southern prisons; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GROUT, by unanimous consent, also introduced a bill (H. R. 3262) granting pensions to all invalid soldiers of the United States in the late civil war who are dependent upon their daily labor for their support; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

DESTRUCTION OF VESSELS AT SEA.

Mr. COLLINS, by unanimous consent, also introduced a bill (H. R. 3263) to amend section 5365 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON WOOL MANUFACTURES.

Mr. BREWER, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 47) providing for the printing of 20,000 copies of the recent special report of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, entitled "Wool and the Manufactures of Wool," 5,000 for the use of the Senate and 15,000 for the use of the House; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MILLS. I renew the motion that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned till Monday next.

SENATE.

MONDAY, January 9, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

ROUND VALLEY INDIAN RESERVATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication, of the 23d ultimo, from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting a draught of a bill "to provide for the reduction of the Round Valley Indian reservation, in the State of California, and for other purposes," with accompanying papers relating thereto. The documents thus submitted exhibit extensive and entirely unjustifiable encroachments upon lands set apart for Indian occupancy, and disclose a disregard of Indian rights so long continued that the Government can not further temporize without positive dishonor. Efforts to dislodge trespassers upon these lands have in some cases been resisted upon the ground that certain moneys due from the Government for improvements have not been paid. So far as this claim is well founded the sum necessary to extinguish the same should be at once appropriated and paid. In other cases the position of these intruders is one of simple and barefaced wrongdoing, plainly questioning the inclination of the Government to protect its dependent Indian wards and its ability to maintain itself in the guaranty of such protection.

These intruders should forthwith feel the weight of the Government's power. I earnestly commend the situation and the wrongs of the Indians occupying the reservation named to the early attention of the Congress, and ask for the bill herewith transmitted careful and prompt attention.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 5, 1888.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, for the consideration of Congress, a draught of a bill to effect a rearrangement of the grades of office in the Subsistence Department of the Army; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the first annual report of the Interstate Commerce Commission, with the recommendation that the connection of the Interstate Commerce Commission with the Department of the Interior be severed; which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY BUILDING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the commissioners for the construction of the Congressional Library building; which, with the accompanying papers, was, on motion of Mr. VOORHEES, referred to the Select Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of Albert S. du Puget, of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for relief; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association of Baltimore, favoring the proposed permanent exposition of the three Americas at the national capital; which was referred to the Select Committee on the Centennial of the Constitution and the Discovery of America.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a resolution adopted by the Queen City Division, No. 60, Order of Railway Conductors at Sedalia, Mo., in regard to Senate bill 874, to provide for the licensing of railway conductors on railways within the United States, introduced in the Senate on the 5th of December, 1887. The memorialists state that it is expected that the Order of Railway Conductors shall favor the passage of the bill, but they are opposed to it for the following reasons:

That the cost of executing the proposed law will be excessive and unreasonable.

That the benefits to the public and commerce will be chimerical and inadequate to the expense.

That no benefit can accrue to the conductors as a class, but that it will impose on them many unnecessary hardships.

That the cost of procuring a license is excessive.

That they do not, as a class, desire any special legislation in their behalf.

That the best judges of their capacity and fitness for their duties are their superior officers, whose official success, to a great extent, depends on faithfulness and ability.

That the bill as introduced is vague and indefinite in its provisions.

I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which committee I understand the bill to which this memorial relates was referred.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. I present a petition sent to me from the office of the general conference steward of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church. Rev. C. R. Harris transmits the petition, and he says that the petition has been circulated in Virginia, the Carolinas, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Tennessee, Kentucky. "I send the first installment to-day. Many are yet to come in, but I thought best to send these, which are all that have come up to this date, so that if you think best you may present them before others arrive.

"The petition was worded by Bishop S. T. Jones, D. D., of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, and has the indorsement of the entire bench of bishops, including J. J. Moore, D. D., J. W. Hood, D. D., J. P. Thompson, and T. H. Lomax. Their signatures will come in a short while. Some of the petitions here sent are signed by an entire conference of ministers of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, and the petition was heartily approved by the conferences in the above-mentioned States.

"Please present these petitions to Congress as the prayer of the black man of the South, and may God move upon the hearts of all Congressmen that they may approve by vote the educational bill."

This petition, he goes on to say, contains between three and four thousand names of people such as he describes. It is addressed to the Congress of the United States. In it they say:

We, the undersigned petitioners, being a portion of the humble people recently enfranchised and invested with the duties and responsibilities of citizenship by the act of the National Government, respectfully ask and earnestly pray that the Government which lifted us from vassalage to the dignity of manhood, would complete the work it has so wisely and meritoriously begun by the speedy adoption of the measure now before Congress known as the "Blair bill," or some such measure as will enable the several States more largely and efficiently to assist us in our own endeavors to prepare ourselves by liberal education so to discharge the duties and responsibilities of the important trust, as shall be more beneficial to the Government, whether local or national.

We would respectfully urge our claim to national aid in our interest for the reasons stated and on the following additional grounds: First, of our enforced and unrequited contribution to the wealth and aggrandizement of the nation; second, of our loyalty and patriotism in times of national calamity, both in the struggle for independence and in the contests for national supremacy; third, of our fidelity in guarding the domestic interests of our late owners while they were engaged in a sanguinary conflict having for its object our perpetual bondage; and, lastly, on the grounds of our poverty and consequent inability to educate ourselves. From these and other considerations we pray that we may have the favor of the National Government, and as in duty bound we shall ever-more pray.

Then follow the signatures to the number of 3,107, as mentioned by Rev. C. R. Harris. As the bill referred to is before the Senate, I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL presented a petition of citizens of Henry County, Virginia, praying for the passage of the bill granting national aid to education; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 425) to grant the right of way through the public lands for irrigation purposes, reported it with amendments.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 1216) providing for the investment of certain funds in the Treasury; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. SHERMAN. As that is an important bill, I should like to have it read so that it may appear in the RECORD. It is very short.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read the second time at length.

The bill was read the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed, from time to time, to invest not exceeding 80 per cent. of the fund held in the Treasury for redemption of notes of national banks "failed," "in liquidation," and "reducing circulation," by the purchase in open market of any bonds of the United States bearing interest.

That whenever the money on hand to the credit of said fund shall fall below 20 per cent. of the fund deposited, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed, from time to time, to sell in open market any portion of the bonds purchased for said fund as may be necessary in his opinion to enable him to pay as presented any notes of national banks for the redemption of which said fund is held, the purpose of this section being to maintain in the Treasury for such redemption not less than 20 per cent. and not exceeding 30 per cent. of the money deposited.

That any national bank now authorized or hereafter authorized to issue 90 per cent. of the bonds deposited by it as security for circulating notes, shall, after the passage of this act, be authorized to issue circulating notes to the amount of 100 per cent. of the par value of the bonds so deposited.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 1217) to establish in the Department of the Treasury a bureau of adulteration and to provide for the maintenance thereof, and to regulate or prohibit the importation, manufacture, and sale of adulterated articles of food and drugs; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BOWEN introduced a bill (S. 1280) granting a pension to Forest M. Castle; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. RANSOM introduced a bill (S. 1281) for the relief of Sophia B. Moore; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1282) to refund to the State of North Carolina certain moneys therein named; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1283) making an appropriation for the erection of a light-house on or near Diamond Shoal off Cape Hatteras, North Carolina; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President, in presenting this bill I desire to express my sincere thanks to the members of the Light-House Board, from whom it emanates, for their thoughtful and careful attention to a subject than which there are but few, if any, more important to the commerce of the world and to humanity.

The bill proposes to appropriate $500,000 for the erection of a light-house on Diamond Shoal, some 10 miles out to sea from the point of Cape Hatteras where the present light-house stands.

I shall not detain the Senate now with an argument in favor of the bill. I will simply say that in all human history there will be but few better or more glorious days than the one on which the dark terrors of Hatteras shall be overcome by the illumination of humane science. Upon all the wide seas there is not a mariner who will not hail and bless that light, which will guide and save their ships in the perilous nights upon that fearful coast, when the very lights of heaven are obscured, and no time will come when the originators or promoters of this work and the country which accomplishes it will not receive, as they will deserve, the gratitude and honor of mankind.

I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Commerce, satisfied, as I am, that that committee will give it prompt and earnest attention.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PAYNE introduced a bill (S. 1284) for the relief of Sarah K. McLean, widow of the late Lieut. Col. Nathaniel H. McLean; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. REAGAN. Before the holidays I introduced a bill to regulate immigration. On examination I find that it is not as full as I desired, and I therefore introduce an amended bill on the same subject.

The bill (S. 1285) to regulate immigration, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 1286) granting a pension to Michael Lane; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 1287) granting arrears of pension to George Andrews; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1288) granting a pension to John Child; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WALTHALL. By request of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] I introduce a bill.

The bill (S. 1289) for the relief of the estate of Francis M. Murray, deceased, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CHANDLER introduced a bill (S. 1290) to enable the Secretary of the Interior to fulfill certain treaty stipulations with the Pottawatomie Nation or tribe of Indians; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER introduced a bill (S. 1291) for the erection of a public building at the city of Staunton, Va.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1292) to construct a road from the city of Staunton to the national cemetery, in the county of Augusta, in the State of Virginia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1293) for the relief of Frank P. Murphy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DANIEL introduced a bill (S. 1294) for the erection of a public building in the city of Roanoke, Roanoke County, Virginia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 1295) for the relief of soldiers and sailors who enlisted or served under assumed names, while minors or otherwise, in the Army or Navy during the war of the rebellion; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 1296) granting the right of way through the public lands of the United States to the United States Railway Company from a point on the Canadian boundary to a point on the Mexican boundary, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. BOWEN introduced a bill (S. 1297) to establish a mint of coinage in the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 27) providing for the printing of a supplement to Wharton's Digest of International Law; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HALE introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 28) authorizing Paymaster J. Q. Burton, of the United States Navy, to accept a decoration conferred upon him by the Emperor of Japan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask an order that the petition and papers of Thomas C. Clark, a claimant for a Revolutionary claim, be withdrawn from the files and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims. There has been, as I understand, no adverse report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, if there be no objection.

On motion of Mr. HARRIS, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of John C. Stansee be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, there having been no adverse report thereon.

On motion of Mr. CULLOM, it was Ordered, That the petition of Lyman Guinnip, for correction of his military record, and the accompanying papers, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, no adverse report having been made on the same.

ADMISSION OF CHINESE.

Mr. STEWART submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was read:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the United States be requested, at the earliest practical moment, to negotiate a treaty with the Emperor of China containing a provision that no Chinese shall enter the United States except ambassadors and others engaged in the diplomatic service of the Chinese Empire and merchants engaged in trade between the United States and foreign countries, and providing further that the United States shall be at liberty to ascertain, by such officers or tribunals as Congress may designate, whether Chinese offering to enter the United States are of the excepted classes.

Mr. STEWART. I ask that the resolution may be printed and lie on the table. I shall call it up in a few days with a view of submitting some remarks in regard to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table, and be printed.

FOREIGN MAIL PARCELS.

Mr. HOAR. I offer the following resolution, for which I ask immediate consideration:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be directed to inform the Senate what length of time books and other parcels received by mail from foreign countries are detained in the custom-house at New York, and if such detention be necessary or not, and what is the reason therefor.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I desire to say that some few years ago this country established what it was supposed would be a great convenience to business men and other persons receiving small parcels from abroad; that is, a system by which books and small parcels of merchandise could be sent by mail. That practice is being very largely resorted to, but I believe it is true—at any rate it has been true in my experience, and I have had a good deal—that it takes longer to get a parcel which comes through the post-office from a foreign country out of the New York custom-house after it has arrived in this country than the whole time spent in the voyage from Europe.

I do not know but that this inquiry ought to have been properly addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury rather than to the Postmaster-General; but I hope the inquiry will lead to a correction of the abuse.

The resolution was agreed to.

COMPILATION OF REVENUE AND APPROPRIATION ACTS.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer the following resolution and ask for its reference to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to compile, for the use of the Senate, from the Journals of the two Houses, the Annals of Congress, the Register of Debates in Congress, and the Congressional Globe and RECORD, a complete chronological history of revenue and general appropriation bills from the First to the Forty-ninth Congresses, inclusive, and for this purpose shall be authorized to employ an additional clerk, who shall be paid out of the contingent fund such compensation as shall be fixed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Iowa, having had a little experience with a similar work upon the Committee on Privileges and Elections, that I think it would be much more convenient to the Senate and to him to have the service performed by a clerk under the immediate direction of the Committee on Finance, of which the Senator is a member. I make the suggestion that an additional clerk to that committee be appointed for that purpose, so that it may go with the original resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; that can be considered by the Committee on Rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Rules, if there be no objection.

COREA.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all correspondence between his Department and the United States minister at Corea relative to recent alleged attempts upon the part of the Chinese Government to dethrone the King of and absorb Corea.

COMING OF CHINESE.

Mr. MITCHELL. On the 12th of December I introduced a bill in reference to Chinese immigration into this country, and at that time asked that it lie on the table. I now give notice that at the conclusion of the morning business on Wednesday next I shall move to take up that bill for the purpose of presenting some remarks in connection with the bill.

INTERNAL-REVENUE LAWS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further resolutions the morning business is closed.

Mr. BROWN. I move to take up the resolutions introduced by myself some days since on the subject of the removal of the internal-revenue taxes, with the view of submitting some remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of resolutions which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolutions submitted by Mr. BROWN, January 4, 1888, as follows:

Resolved, That the practice of the Government of the United States was correct, for the first three-quarters of a century of its existence, when it collected the revenues necessary to its support at the ports or other boundaries of our territory by tariff, except in cases of war or other great emergency, when internal-revenue laws or laws imposing direct taxes were passed, which were repealed as soon as the emergency which called them forth ceased to exist.

Resolved, That the present internal-revenue laws, which were enacted as war measures in time of a great emergency, which are onerous, oppressive, and undemocratic, have existed for almost a quarter of a century after the emergency has passed, and there being a very large surplus in the Treasury, which it is the duty of the Government to provide against by a reduction of the revenues, it becomes the imperative duty of Congress to enact appropriate legislation for the repeal of said internal-revenue laws at the earliest day practicable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to take up the resolutions.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the resolutions.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, the Constitution of the United States, in Article I, section 8, declares that Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises; to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States, but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

And in section 9 of the same article it is provided that no capitation or other direct tax shall be laid unless in proportion to the census or enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken.

And it is then declared that "no tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State."

Now it seems very clear that the Constitution clothes Congress with full power to collect the revenues of this Government by duties on imports, or imposts by excise laws, or laws of the character now called the internal-revenue laws, or by a direct tax. So far as the power of Congress over the subject is concerned there seems to be no doubt that it may adopt either of the modes above mentioned, or all of them, in collecting the revenues necessary to an economical administration of the Government, and all of these modes of raising revenue have been practiced at different times under authority of different acts of Congress.

There can, therefore, be no constitutional question involved, as the whole question is a question of policy, or of interest, and not of constitutional law. In the passage of a revenue act we should have regard, as far as may be, to the local interest of every State or section, and to the best interests of the whole people.

Local interests have so much to do with this question that it has scarcely ever happened that a strict party vote has been cast on the passage of a general revenue act. There being no constitutional question involved, each State and each section naturally has more or less regard to its own local interests.

The first session of the First Congress, on the 4th day of July, 1789, passed—

An act for laying a duty on goods, wares, and merchandise imported into the United States.

The preamble of said act is in these words:

Whereas it is necessary for the support of Government, for the discharge of the debts of the United States, and the encouragement and protection of manufactures that duties be laid on goods, wares, and merchandise imported.

Then follows the body of the statute, laying a tariff on a large class of imported goods, wares, and merchandise. This was the first revenue act passed by the Congress of the United States after the organization of the Government. Mr. Madison was a leading member of Congress, and a number of others were members who were also members of the convention that framed the Constitution of the United States, and who were familiar with the construction placed upon it at the time by those who participated in its creation.

In passing this first revenue act Congress had three objects in view, as avowed in the preamble: first, the support of the Government; second, the discharge of the debts of the United States, and, third, the encouragement and protection of manufactures. This act was a tariff act only, taxing goods, wares, and merchandise imported from other countries. The first internal-revenue act was not passed until 1792.

At that time the population of the United States was small and the people were poor, and they did not use enough of imported goods in their plain mode of life to raise sufficient revenue to support the new Government and pay the debts contracted during the Revolution, and Congress found it necessary to enact internal-revenue laws taxing a number of articles produced within the United States. On account of the necessities of the Treasury these different modes were resorted to more than once during the two administrations of General Washington and the administration of Mr. Adams.

When Mr. Jefferson, who was elected President in the year 1800, came into power, it is well understood that he did not favor the internal-revenue system, and in his first annual message he recommended that it be abolished. He says:

Other circumstances combined with the increase of numbers have produced an augmentation of revenue arising from consumption in a ratio far beyond that of population alone, and though the changes in foreign relations now taking place so desirably for the whole world may for a season affect this branch of revenue, yet, weighing all probabilities of expense as well as of income, there is reasonable ground of confidence that we may now safely dispense with all internal taxes, comprehending excise, stamps, auctions, licenses, carriages, and refined sugars, to which the postage on newspapers may be added to facilitate the progress of information, and that the remaining resources of revenue will be sufficient for the support of Government, to pay the interest of the public debts and to discharge the principals within shorter periods than the laws or general expectation had contemplated. War, indeed, and untoward events may change this prospect of things on a call for expense which the imposts could not meet.

But sound principles will not justify our taxing the industries of our fellow-citizens to accumulate treasure for wars to happen we know not when, and which might not perhaps happen but for the temptations offered by that treasure.

Here Mr. Jefferson, the author of the Declaration of Independence, the great apostle of human rights, and the father of the Democracy, draws the true distinction. He recommends the repeal of the internal-revenue laws, because there is no emergency that justifies their continuance, and leaves it to the future as to a return to them if foreign wars should create an emergency calling for more revenue than the imposts or customs would yield.

Congress acted promptly upon the recommendation of President Jefferson and passed the necessary act abolishing the internal-revenue system, with proper provisions for winding it up. In his second annual message, referring to the subject, President Jefferson says:

The collection of internal taxes having been completed in some of the States the officers employed in it are of course out of commission. In others, they will be shortly; but in a few, where the arrangements for the direct tax had been retarded, it will be some time before the system is closed.

Again, in the same message, he also says:

Where effects so salutary result from the plans you have already sanctioned, when merely by avoiding false objects of expense we are able without a direct tax, without internal taxes, and without borrowing, to make large and effectual payments towards the discharge of our public debt and the emancipation of our posterity from that mortal canker, it is an encouragement, fellow-citizens, of the highest order, to proceed as we have begun, in substituting economy for taxation, and in pursuing what is useful for a nation placed as we are, rather than what is practiced by others under different circumstances, and whensoever we are destined to meet events which shall call forth all the energies of our countrymen we have the firmest reliance on those energies, and the comfort of leaving for calls like these the extraordinary resources of loans and internal taxes. In the mean time, by payments of the principal of our debt, we are liberating annually portions of the external taxes and forming from them a growing fund still further to lessen the necessity of recurring to extraordinary resources.

This shows Mr. Jefferson's position very clearly, that neither loans nor internal taxes were justifiable except in cases of great emergency, when the necessary revenue could not be raised by tariff taxation, which is sometimes designated the customs and sometimes impost duties, while the internal-revenue laws are characterized as excise laws.

Congress, upon the recommendation of the President, having abolished the internal taxes, Mr. Jefferson, in his second inaugural address, uses the following language on the subject of internal taxation and in disapprobation of the continuance by the Government of two armies of collectors or revenue officers. He says:

The suppression of unnecessary offices, of useless establishments and expenses, enabled us to discontinue our internal taxes. These covering our land with officers and opening our doors to their intrusions, had already begun that process of domiciliary vexation which once entered is scarcely to be restrained from reaching successively every article of produce and property. If among these taxes some minor ones fell, which had not been inconvenient, it was because their amount would not have paid the officers who collected them, and because if they had any merit the State authorities might adopt them instead of others less approved.

The remaining revenue on the consumption of foreign articles is paid cheerfully by those who can afford to add foreign luxuries to domestic comforts, being collected on our seaboard and frontiers only, and incorporated with the transactions of our mercantile citizens; it may be the pleasure and pride of an American to ask, what farmer, what mechanic, what laborer ever sees a tax-gatherer of the United States?

This shows that the father and great apostle of the Democracy, who not only understood but inculcated its principles with an ability that none of his followers has probably possessed, did not, except in cases of extreme emergency, favor the system either of direct tax or internal-revenue laws, but he favored the collection of the taxes necessary to support the Government by customs collected at the ports, or, in other words, by tariff. It is safe Democracy to follow in Jefferson's footsteps and to practice his precepts. Thus the law stood for several years. But during the Presidency of Mr. Madison, when the country became involved in a war with Great Britain, it became necessary to raise revenue, as a war measure, by every means in the power of the Government, to support the armies and maintain the character and credit of the United States; and Congress during the war enacted internal-revenue laws very similar to those which were enacted during the late civil war which commenced in 1861; but everybody understood that it was no longer the settled policy of the Government to collect its revenues by direct tax or by the internal-revenue laws. And in about three years after the treaty of peace with Great Britain the internal-revenue system was repealed, except such portions of it as were necessary to enforce the collection of taxes already due, and the system was abandoned by all parties. This law of repeal took effect the last of the year 1817, and from that time to 1861, during a period of forty-four years, all parties, Federal, Democratic, Whig, American, and Republican, agreed, as the settled policy of the Government, that its revenues were to be raised at the ports and by tariff only.

Of course the powers above enumerated still rested in Congress and could be properly used in case of emergency, but it became the settled policy of the Government and the people of the United States not to permit the use of these powers except in some great emergency, and h en for no longer period than the emergency might last. And let it be borne in mind that the internal-revenue system growing out of the war of 1812 was not continued in operation until the war debt contracted during that struggle was paid, or until the pensions for the soldiers who served in that war were paid, but it was continued for only a very short period after the struggle ended.

During the forty years above mentioned the different contending political parties, most of the time the Whig and Democratic parties, differed widely on the proper mode of levying the tariff, but all were agreed that the revenues necessary to support the Federal Government should be raised by tariff, and by tariff only.

The civil war, commencing in 1861, again brought a great strain upon the Government, and it became necessary for it to raise revenue, not only by tariff, as in ordinary times, but by direct tax and by a very comprehensive and sweeping internal-r venue system.

The necessity and propriety of the assessment of taxes in all three of the modes then practiced, during the existence of such an emergency, are admitted. But it is contended we should have followed the example of the great men who conducted the Revolution and who inaugurated the Government and put its machinery into operation, including Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe, and we should have continued the direct tax and the internal-revenue system for the period of the emergency only. This was true of the direct tax, as there was but one assessment of a tax of that character, and that was not all paid, and there was no effort, I believe, to make a second assessment.

But the internal-revenue laws were much more sweeping and multiform in character, and instead of their repeal within three years after the termination of the great struggle, as was done by our fathers at the end of the war of 1812, it has now been twenty-two years since the war ended, and we are still collecting, in round numbers, $118,000,000 a year under the internal-revenue system, and at a time, too, when there is a heavy surplus of revenue in the Treasury, and the effort of statesmen is to get rid of the surplus, and not to increase the revenue.

It is true that many of the provisions of the internal-revenue system established during the war have been repealed from time to time, and we have now reached a point where the principal remaining revenue is a tax on tobacco and a tax on distilled spirits and fermented liquors. We have collected during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, $55,829,-321.71 tax on distilled spirits, and on fermented liquors $21,922,187.49, making an aggregate on distilled spirits and fermented liquors of $87,-751,509.20; and from tobacco, cigarettes, cigars, etc., the sum of $30,-108,067.13.

Thus you see, Mr. President, we have departed from the practice and precepts of our fathers, and twenty-two years after the end of the war, which was the emergency that justified the enactment of the internal-revenue laws, we are still paying an enormous sum of internal taxes which our fathers would have abolished, judging by their example, within three years after the war terminated. I think we have certainly reached a period now when a large majority of the people of the United States who do not live at the ports where our customs are collected should be permitted to say, in the language of Mr. Jefferson, that it is "the pleasure and pride of an American to ask, what farmer, what mechanic, what laborer ever sees a tax-gatherer of the United States?"

We are maintaining two systems of taxation and paying the expense of two armies of officers and employés who are in the service of the Government, and drawing good salaries from the pockets of the people, when there is no just reason why we should pay but one corps of collectors.

Let us look a little at the expense and the practice of this internal system of taxation. According to the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the collection of the tax for the past year cost $4,065,-148.87. This does not include the loss to the Government of leakage on spirits, or casualties, or loss by fire, of which I will speak hereafter, or the price of printing revenue stamps, but it includes the actual cost of the collection of the revenue. It is a sum almost as large as the entire revenue of the Government in Washington's first administration.

The Government employs in the internal-revenue system nearly 4,000 persons. During the last fiscal year there were 85 collectors, each having control of a large district; 950 deputy collectors, 184 clerks, some of whom received fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, and eighteen hundred dollars per annum, and others smaller salaries. There were 35 porters and messengers, there were 625 gaugers, 555 storekeepers, and 757 who acted as storekeeper and gauger. There were general distillery surveyors, together with other agents and employés, aggregating, in the whole, as already stated, about 4,000 persons. This army of Government officials and employés are, from the very nature of the case, compelled to conduct a system of espionage which is a great annoyance and vexation to our people, and which creates a great deal of disloyalty to the Government, in many cases not without good cause; and Mr. Jefferson characterized it well when he said "these," referring to the internal taxes, "covering our land with officers, and opening our doors to their intrusion, had already begun that process of domiciliary vexation which, once entered, is scarcely to be restrained from reaching successively every article of produce and property."

The father of Democracy, therefore, in strong terms, condemned this employment of an army of internal spies, officers, and employés to collect an internal tax, and it must be admitted that the condemnation was just. Not only does the system lead to a great amount of espionage, and numerous frivolous prosecutions, but the people, being strongly opposed to the law, take the chances of defying or evading the Government, when it undertakes to restrain them from the exercise of a privilege which they regard as a part of their birthright, to manufacture the stimulants which they think they need out of the productions of their own labor.

To show the reason for the hostility to the internal-revenue law, and the rigor, and in many instances, cruelty, with which it has been enforced, I have obtained from the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue a statement of the number of prosecutions and the number of convictions in the northern district of Georgia alone, for ten years, commencing June 30, 1877, and ending June 30, 1887, and I find that there were 4,647 prosecutions based on indictments or criminal informations in that single district, and the convictions during the same period for violations of the internal-revenue laws in the northern district of Georgia were 2,533. Here were 4,647 persons arrested and dragged from their homes, in many instances nearly 100 miles, to Atlanta, where they were imprisoned, and 2,533 of them were convicted for violations of this law, which they consider odious and oppressive, while 2,114 were acquitted, showing the charges against them to have been false and unfounded. But this is not all. The violations of the law have been mostly in the northern and northeastern portions of the State, in what might be termed the mountain belt, where there is a hardy, honest, brave, independent class of people, who, at the commencement of the late unfortunate war, were more loyal to the Government of the United States than the people of any other portion of the State of Georgia; but they feel that they have been oppressed by these odious laws, until there is probably less loyalty to the Government there now than in any other part of the State. The persons arrested for violations of the law who live a long way from Atlanta were carried there for trial, and where they were unable to give bail were imprisoned, and probably a half dozen of the neighbors of each were subpœnaed as witnesses, and were compelled to attend court at great distance from home during one, two, or three terms before the case was disposed of.

They are an agricultural people, and the term of the court that comes in the spring of the year embraces the period when they are planting their crops. Large numbers of them have lost their crops or had them greatly neglected and damaged on account of their being obliged to attend court, either as defendants or as witnesses. They have been unable to pay their bills at hotels, and have had to camp out in many instances, and suffered great hardship and fatigue, and great privation, the hardship being almost as great upon the witnesses as upon the defendants themselves. If all the witnesses subpœnaed for the United States and for the defense were embraced in the enumeration it would probably reach ten or fifteen thousand persons who have been dragged from their homes in that district and compelled to attend the sessions of the United States courts, at the greatest possible inconvenience and loss to themselves. How heartily do these people, and all their neighbors and friends, indorse the sentiment of Mr. Jefferson as to the "pleasure and pride of an American who can ask, what farmer, what mechanic, what laborer ever sees a tax-gatherer of the United States?"

They have not only seen tax-gatherers, but they have been annoyed by spies and cursed by the process of domiciliary vexation referred to by Mr. Jefferson. They have been made the victims of cruelty and oppression, such as no free people ought to be required to endure. It is true there has been a great modification of all this rigor in the execution of the law as it is administered by the present collector and the present marshal of the northern district of Georgia, who are both high-toned gentlemen and excellent officers, but they have seen enough of the hardships of the system, and have known enough of its past cruelty to our citizens to satisfy them both that the system ought to be abolished in toto.

The Legislature of the State of Georgia has passed almost unanimously, on four different occasions, resolutions instructing their Senators and requesting their Representatives in Congress to use every reasonable effort to have these odious laws repealed. Popular sentiment is overwhelmingly opposed to these laws, and no act would give greater satisfaction to the people of Georgia than an act sweeping them entirely off the statute-book.

But the simple indictments and inconvenience above referred to have not, during the past administrations, been the worst part of the case. It has happened again and again that certain subordinate revenue officers have been sent out through the country upon raids, hunting illicit distilleries. Probably they would find a distillery without a license, or registration, and find some citizen there who may be the owner, or may be only a visitor, or an employé, who would naturally be frightened on seeing the revenue officers, who have been a terror to the citizens of that district. The unfortunate man, in the midst of his fright, breaks to run, the revenue officer raises his gun and shoots him down. At the next term of the superior court of the county the grand jury finds a true bill against this official marauder for murder. A motion is made at the next term of the court to transfer the case to the Federal court, on the ground that the person who did the killing was in the employment and was an officer of the Government of the United States at the time. The case is transferred by order of the Federal court, and in the Federal court the district attorney is directed to defend the murderer, because he was the acting officer of the United States when he did the killing. The result has been in every such case, I believe, without exception that the prosecution has ended in an acquittal, so that it may be truly said, that a revenue officer can go raiding and shoot down any citizen he pleases who is found at an illicit still, and feel confident that he will not be put on trial in the State court, but that his case will be removed to the Federal court, and, judging from the universal practice that has prevailed, that he will there be acquitted.

But this is not all. An unfortunate defendant charged with the violation of the internal-revenue laws is put upon trial and convicted. He may be a weakly man, with weak lungs. The offense is one of a grade that on conviction requires the court to pass a sentence of penitentiary imprisonment, and instead of being imprisoned in his own State, or in a climate to which he is accustomed, he is sent to prison at Albany, N. Y., by order of the court; and by the time he has served out his term there his health is frequently so permanently impaired that he goes home a wreck, to die there as a result of his confinement in the rigorous climate of a northern prison. Forty citizens of Georgia have been consigned to this northern prison.

But this is not all. The fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States declares that no State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. This, then, certainly denies to any State the power by its officers to go into the country and seize the property of a citizen, and destroy it without judicial trial, or due process of law. Not so, however, with the officers of the Government of the United States, when they go raiding upon the unfortunate victims who are suspected of violation of the internal-revenue laws. They hold themselves under no such restraint. They seize and destroy property because they discover or suspect that it is being used in violation of the internal-revenue laws. For instance, they seize the distilleries and destroy the stills; they pour out large quantities of beer; they seize and take possession of and carry away large quantities of whisky wherever they may find it without the proper marks or brands, and they seize property belonging to the citizen, and destroy it at their pleasure, without judicial process and without any due process of law. Their sovereign will determines the rights of the citizen. A deputy collector, a mere subaltern, decides the question whether the property is the subject of destruction, and he acts as judge, jury, and executioner, and carries his own order into effect by the destruction of the property, when his sovereign pleasure so dictates, and the party injured is left to seek redress from the Government as best he may.

By reference to the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, I find that during the last fiscal year there were 199 stills seized in the State of Georgia, 99 of them were destroyed, and 100 were removed. Of course it was charged that these stills were being used in violation of the internal-revenue laws, and if the officers, executing the laws had been State officers there would have been no question that under the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution none of the stills could have been destroyed or removed and confiscated or appropriated without a trial in court; in other words, without due process of law. But no such trial is had when the seizure is made by the Federal officers. They seize and destroy the property of the citizen at pleasure, and there is no one to make them afraid. I also see by the table in the same report that there were 690 persons arrested by the Federal officers during the last fiscal year in the State of Georgia. Any system of collecting revenue which justifies the agents of the Government in making raids upon the honest masses of our people, and shooting down citizens at their pleasure, seizing and imprisoning innocent men, seizing and destroying the property of citizens without judicial trial, or without due process of law, and dragging thousands of persons hundreds of miles from their homes as witnesses, in what very often turn out to be frivolous prosecutions, is an outrageously oppressive and iniquitous system, and should never be practiced by a republican government longer than it is absolutely necessary to relieve the pressing wants of the Treasury, as in case of war, or some great calamity, and should certainly never be maintained nor practiced to pay money into the Treasury which the Government does not need, and especially when we are striving to enact laws for the reduction of taxation.

Why can not this outrageously oppressive system be abolished; why may we not profit by the precepts and example of our fathers on this question? Why continue to oppress the citizens of this Republic, to shoot them down by official marauders because they are accused of violating this system? Why continue a system that authorizes Federal agents or employés to seize and destroy without trial the property of the citizen at pleasure? Why continue a system that vexes and harasses the citizen with unfounded prosecutions for trivial offenses? Why continue a system that fills our jails with innocent people and compels an army of witnesses to attend the Federal court at the greatest possible inconvenience to themselves and families, which transports convicted citizens for imprisonment to a rigorous climate to which they are not accustomed, endangering their health, and often costing them their lives? Why continue a system that turns loose four thousand officers and detectives among our people, prying into their most private affairs, and having them prosecuted for the most trivial offenses? Why continue to tax the people of the United States over $4,000,000 a year to support this system, which is a monstrous outrage upon the rights and liberties of a free people?

Why can not this odious law, which has been repealed as to many other articles, be repealed so far as it relates to tobacco and whisky; and its army of retainers, spies, and marauders, which in the past has been too often the character of the force employed, be discharged from the pay-roll of the Government, and sent to seek their living and earn their bread in other pursuits? Why are the farmers of Virginia, and North Carolina, and South Carolina, Georgia, Kentucky, and Tennessee, and other States compelled to pay a heavy internal tax upon one of their principal agricultural productions, tobacco, when no one of the other crops or productions of the country is taxed in like manner? Why select this particular commodity or crop, and levy thirty millions a year upon its production? Why is this oppression applied to tobacco planters that does not apply to the cotton planters, or the planters who raise wheat, or oats, or barley, or grass, or other agricultural production? What justice is there in this discrimination?

But I may be told that a majority of the members of this present Congress favor the repeal of the tobacco tax, but that the whisky tax will not be surrendered—never, no, never! Why not? For a reason that does not apply to the farmer who raises tobacco. The whisky tax can not be abolished for the reason that those who pay the tax and charge it to others and make enormous profits are not willing to have it abolished. In other words, the distillers insist on being permitted to pay the whisky tax and charge it to the consumer; therefore the Congress of the United States must not touch this holy shrine which is too sacred to be polluted by profane hands and too profitable to be given up by those who control it. I repeat, why can not the whisky tax be abolished? For the reason that the combination of distillers who pay the tax and charge it to the people who consume their productions are too powerful for the Government. They have decreed that their occupation and their enormous profits shall not be taken from them and their monopoly shall not be destroyed, and that others not belonging to the brotherhood shall not participate on equal terms, unless it be those of their own class. In other words, the present whisky ring, if I may use the expression without offense to the dignity of that great association of protected capitalists, insist on paying the Government a very heavy tax, with the privilege of charging it to the people, and then make an enormous profit out of the business.

Mr. President, we have heard a great deal in this Chamber about monopoly, about the greed of manufacturers, about railroad combinations and monopolies, and monopolies in steamships and in various crafts for transportation. We have heard about a monopoly or a corner in stocks, or in wheat, or in cotton, or other productions, but there is not a monopoly on the American continent that is at all comparable to the monopoly controlled by the great whisky ring of this country. There is no other association or monopoly that is so well protected and that has so fine a margin for enormous profits.

In the first place, the whisky ring of the United States is protected by a tariff of $2 per gallon on all imported whisky from all other countries. No matter whether it be Irish or Scotch whisky, or what country it may come from, when it reaches our ports it must not come in competition with the great whisky ring of this country without paying a tariff of $2 a gallon, which is charged to the consumer, and according to the logic of the tariff reformers is a profit of $2 a gallon to the great whisky ring of this country. So that at the custom-house they are the best protected of American citizens, and they have nothing to fear, as other manufacturers generally have, from competition from abroad, as their protection in proportion to the cost of the commodity is greater than that of any other manufactured article in the United States.

Let us inquire for a moment what are the profits of the whisky ring of this country, and we will probably see the motive that prompts such terrible opposition to every movement that looks to the removal of the tax on this commodity.

By reference to the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue it will be seen that there were 17,959,565 bushels of grain distilled into spirits during the past fiscal year, and it made a little over 4 gallons of spirits to each bushel of grain.

A bushel of corn in Illinois or Iowa can be bought for from 30 to 40 cents, and, many times, much below that. Now let us throw away the fraction over 4 gallons of whisky per bushel which the distillers make out of the corn, and it takes one-fourth of a bushel of corn to make a gallon of whisky, and one-fourth of a bushel of corn cost the distiller 10 cents; so that for 10 cents he buys corn enough to make a gallon of good whisky. It is said that it costs the distiller about 10 cents a gallon to make the whisky, making the corn and the whole expense of manufacturing the whisky together, cost the distiller, say, 20 cents a gallon.

The internal-revenue tax is 90 cents per gallon, to be added. But the licensed distiller does not have to pay this tax into the Treasury of the United States upon the quantity of spirits made by him. But without paying any interest upon it during the period when payment is withheld, he may place it in a bonded warehouse for a term of three years, and the Government will pay the gauger to gauge it and ascertain the quantity, and the Government will pay out of the Treasury of the United States the salary of a storekeeper to guard the bonded warehouse, and see that the whisky belonging to the licensed distiller is protected and taken care of by the Government's agent, paid out of the pockets of the people. The distiller may permit it to lie in the bonded warehouse for three years, without interest, paying no revenue into the Treasury for that time, but at the end of three years he must remove it from the bonded warehouse and pay the tax of 90 cents a gallon on it in its then condition. The whisky being three years old, it is worth in the market probably from two to three dollars a gallon. But we will suppose, for the purposes of this argument, that it is worth $2.10 a gallon when it is three years old. Out of this, the distiller must pay 90 cents per gallon tax, which he charges to the consumer, and 20 cents a gallon, the cost of the whisky, which leaves a balance of, say, $1 per gallon as his net profits.

The report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shows that there were made during the fiscal year 1887 75,974,376 gallons of whisky from grain. The same report shows that there were during the same year 1,160 grain distilleries registered, and 969 registered grain distilleries were operated during that year, so that the 969 distillers of grain produced, according to the report, 75,974,376 gallons of distilled spirits. This was an average of 78,404 gallons to each distiller. Now, suppose the profits of the distiller to be $1 per gallon, as estimated above. This would give to each of the 969 sturdy "whisky barons" an annual average profit of $78,404. Some of the larger ones no doubt would get more, and some of the smaller ones would get less, but that is the average as I figure it according to the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, estimating the profits at $1 per gallon. This would be a very pretty net income. Doubtless the sturdy "whisky barons," who are accustomed to large results, would not think it extravagant, but any other manufacturing interest in this country would regard it an immensely large net income.

But let us test the profits of the distiller by another rule. I understand the position of a large class of tariff reformers in this country to be this: That if a foreign merchant imports into this county a large quantity of wool, for instance, when the tariff on wool is 20 per cent., the importer adds the tariff to the original price of the wool, thus charging the tariff to the consumer, and that this raises the price of all wool in the market, as well that produced in our own country as that which is imported, 20 per cent., which gives to each wool-grower or wool merchant 20 per cent. net profit which he would not receive but for the tariff. Now let us apply this rule to the distiller. A foreign distiller imports into this country a large quantity of whisky. The tariff on whisky is $2 a gallon. According to the rule above referred to, which is so earnestly advocated by able and distinguished tariff reformers, this $2 is added to the price of the whisky, and must be paid by the consumer. This raises the price (if the rule be correct) of whisky in this country from 20 cents a gallon at the still to $2.20, and enables every distiller to make $2 per gallon, the amount of the tariff, net profit on his whisky, which would give to the whole combination of registered distillers for the last fiscal year a net profit in round numbers of $152,000,000 on 76,000,000 gallons made by them. This is very handsome protection and a splendid net profit for a small association of 969 capitalists to make in a single year.

I will not stop to inquire in this connection whether the tariff reformers are correct in the assumption that a tariff of 20 per cent. or 50 per cent. imposed on imported goods raises the price of all goods of that character 20 per cent. or 50 per cent. in the market and gives to the manufacturer of these goods that per cent. of net profit.

I only state the proposition, which is submitted by very able and distinguished tariff reformers as axiomatic, with the remark that if their theory be true, then the whisky ring makes a net profit of $2 a gallon on all the whisky made by them, or of $152,000,000 per annum. Count the original cost of the whisky at 20 cents a gallon and the tariff at $2 a gallon, and the whisky is protected by a tariff of 1,000 per cent., which is vastly greater than the protection afforded any other commodity on account of importation into the United States from any foreign country. With this protection at the ports our good friends, the "whisky barons," as they have been termed, need feel no serious alarm growing out of foreign competition.

Again, our laws carefully guard and protect the whisky monopolists against loss by leakage, casualty, or destruction by fire. For instance, if the distiller puts a forty-gallon barrel of whisky in a bonded warehouse, and it lies there three years, guarded by the agent of the United States at the expense of the people, when the time comes that he must take it out and pay the tax on it, the Government very promptly and kindly allows him a deduction of 7½ gallons per barrel for the leakage during the time that the Government guarded and protected it for him at its own expense. And if by any mishap the whisky is destroyed by fire or other casualty, provision is made for his relief and he is exempt from paying the tax upon it. In other words, the Government takes it in charge, pays its own storekeeper in bonded warehouse out of the pockets of the people to guard the whisky for the distiller for three years, and allows him a very large percentage for leakage, and in the event of casualty exempts him from taxation, and collects, not 90 cents a gallon on the whisky as it was measured when first distilled, but 90 cents a gallon on the old mellow Bourbon as it is turned out of the bonded warehouse after the legal deductions above mentioned.

But suppose at the end of the three years there springs up a lively foreign demand for whisky, and the distiller sees that he can make a large profit by shipping it out of the country. He then takes it from the bonded warehouse under regulations prescribed by the Department, and ships it abroad, paying no tax upon it, as the Constitution of the United States does not permit the Government to impose an export duty. In that case, therefore, he has made his whisky, put it in bonded warehouse, had it guarded at the expense of the Government for three years, had proper deductions for leakage made in his favor, and he then exports it without paying any tax upon it, or even paying the Government and people of the United States for the expense of the storekeeper who guarded it in the warehouse. And, if the exportation were made in good faith, and he fails to make sale abroad as he expected to do, and has retained his whisky in the original sealed packages, he may, when it is still older, and more mellow, import it back into this country through the custom-house, by paying 90 cents a gallon upon it, while all foreign whisky by the side of it is paying $2 a gallon as an import duty.

This would seem to be favorable enough to a member of the great protected whisky fraternity. But I have said that this is a monopoly, the grandest monopoly on this continent, one where vast operations are conducted, and one of vast profits to those engaged. Is it a protected monopoly? As I have already shown, it is protected against all foreign whisky, no matter by what nation made or sold, by a tariff of $2 a gallon, which is a very handsome profit. On that side, then, the Government has done its part very faithfully in building up and protecting this huge association of monopolists.

But it may be said that every American citizen has a right to engage in the same business and that therefore it is not a monopoly. This is a mistake. Prior to the passage of the law setting up this monopoly there were thousands of small distillers scattered all over the country who made the quantity of spirits for which there was demand. Large numbers of them did not make regularly five gallons a day. Take the mountain section of my own State, where there has been so much trouble with the revenue officers, and the small distiller lives, say, 75 miles from a railroad. He makes 100 bushels of corn for sale. If he hauled it across the Blue Ridge Mountains to the railroad in past years, when there was no railroad anywhere near him, the cartage or freight was worth about half the price of the corn. Instead of doing this he united with one or two of his neighbors who had a like quantity of corn for sale and they put up a small distillery and distilled their corn into whisky, and they could then carry it to the railroad or to a distant city in barrels with one or two wagons and teams. This enabled them to realize from their corn a profit by the distillation, and gave them money to buy their necessaries, such as salt, sugar, coffee, and the like.

This class of persons who formerly engaged in the business of distillation was very numerous, and in the aggregate they made a large quantity of whisky. Prior to the passage of the revenue laws, which created the great monopoly above referred to, there were very few large distilleries in this country, most of the whisky needed for use being made by the small distillers. In arranging this grand enterprise, where a number of capitalists could put their money to vast profit, it became necessary to have legislation or authorized orders of the Government for their protection on both sides. They must be protected by a proper tariff against importation of foreign whisky. This was promptly done. Then they must be protected internally against this army of small distillers, who were making most of the whisky used in this country.

As it was necessary to have the distillery registered and prepare a warehouse and incur the expense necessary to make whisky on a reasonably large scale, the little distillers above mentioned were left out by their poverty and their inability to make the investment necessary to conduct a registered distillery. This gave the licensed distillers the control of the business. But, to "make assurance doubly sure" and guard against any mishap on that point, a ruling was made at an early period in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that no one could receive a license or be permitted to distill unless he could make at least 20 gallons of whisky every three days. This was 6⅔ gallons a day regularly. This was sufficient to cut off this army of small distillers to which I have made reference. They can not get a license to distill. If let alone they would, on account of their large number, distill an immense quantity of whisky, but the privilege is denied to them absolutely on any terms because they are too small to be let into the big ring, and they are too numerous to be permitted to conduct a business in competition with it that would seriously impair its profits. They can not get a license and they must not interfere with the monopoly without a license. If they make whisky without a license the jail door stands at their back. And it is made the legal duty of a faithful revenue officer to arrest the little distiller, carry him before a commissioner and have him bound over to the Federal court, and if he is too poor to give bond, lodge him in jail and keep him there until the time for trial, summon his neighbors to attend court fifty to one hundred miles from home as witnesses against him, and when convicted send him to the Albany penitentiary for the period prescribed by law for his offense. Here stands, then, this immense whisky monopoly, strongly protected against foreign whisky by a tariff of $2 a gallon at the coast, and equally well fortified by the orders and practice of the Government against the immense number of small distillers in the interior by keeping the jail door open at their backs, so that they may be hurried in if they interfere with the privileges of this great class of protected capitalists. No association of protected capitalists, no brotherhood with a common interest, could be better fortified against assault in every direction. Two dollars a gallon protection in the custom-house and the jail door open in the interior ready to receive their competitor if he shows his head, and all the spies, marshals, and courts of the Federal Government bound by law to protect them against the people of the interior who would attempt to encroach upon their royal privilege of making a gallon of whisky out of a peck of corn, which costs them 10 cents, and paying 90 cents a gallon tax upon it, which they charge to the consumer, and having it guarded at the expense of the Government by an agent paid out of the Treasury of the United States for three years, when it is worth, say, from two to three dollars a gallon.

This immense profit is enough to tempt the foreign importer, and enough to make the little humble citizen of the interior long for a participation, and try competition in his own small way, even at the risk of lodgment in the jail. But usually the spies, collectors, marshals, district attorneys, and courts, who are obliged under the law to care for the protection of the fraternity, are too powerful for the poor class of violators of the royal privilege of the great whisky ring, and when the competitors can not otherwise be controlled, their active intrusion and competition are certainly for the time prevented by their imprisonment in the common jails of their own State or the penitentiary of a distant State.

But the intrusion of the little man, the small manufacturer or small dealer, who might annoy the great protected fraternity and reduce their profits by competition, is not limited to the interior alone. Even at the ports the small man is commanded to stand aside, the envious looker-on who can under no circumstances participate. For his exclusion our tariff law of 1883 makes the following provision:

> But any brandy or other spirituous liquors imported in casks of less capacity than 14 gallons shall be forfeited to the United States.

So that the little distiller who can not make 20 gallons in three days in the interior is knocked entirely out of the ring, and the little importer who has not more than 14 gallons in his cask is disposed of in the same summary manner. None of this class of small people, either by sea or land, can be permitted to come in competition with the great protected whisky fraternity.

But it is said that the repeal of the internal-revenue laws will turn whisky and tobacco loose without taxation; that neither of these articles is what is usually termed a "necessity," but both are luxuries; and that it is a great deal better to reduce the tariff and give to the families of the poor free trace-chains, free wool hats, and free calico, which they now get cheaper than they ever did at any former period of the existence of the Government, than it is to give them free tobacco and free whisky.

Now, I suppose I might with propriety controvert the position that tobacco is not a "necessary." It is used by a very large proportion of the population of this country, and a man who uses it will generally tell you that he can do without any other article of food or drink better than he can without his tobacco. But suppose it is classed under the head of luxuries, then it is a luxury that the poor man, as well as the rich, will have as long as he can raise a dollar with which to purchase it. And the money necessary to purchase it is used for the purpose, and not for the support of the family, so that the money with which the poor man buys his tobacco is taken from the money which he provides by his labor for the support of his family and is made part of the expenses of the family. Suppose the internal tax be 100 per cent. upon the value of tobacco, and that a poor man uses, when he pays the internal tax upon it, $20 worth in a year. If we abolish the internal-revenue tax we take off $10 from the cost of his tobacco, which goes to the support of his family, giving them $10 worth of additional necessities and comforts. It is, therefore, according to the practice of the country, as much a part of the necessaries for the support of the family as is sugar, coffee, wool hats, trace-chains, or calico, and when you take the tax off tobacco you will probably please more poor laboring men than you can please by any other act of legislation which does not reduce tax to a greater amount.

The same rule applies substantially to whisky. It may be classed among luxuries, and it may be denied that it is a necessary of life, and yet there are very few families in this broad land that do not use more or less of it, and they will use it, as long as they can raise a dollar with which to pay for it, whether they get it at a high price or a low price, and when we put a tax of 90 cents a gallon on whisky that only costs the distiller 20 cents a gallon, we put a tax of 450 per cent. upon a commodity that the laboring man as well as the wealthy man of this country will use, without regard to the tax or the prohibitory laws that may be passed on that subject. As the matter now stands, the poor man who is obliged to buy a gallon of whisky to keep in his house for medicinal purposes, or who buys it that he may occasionally take a drink, as most men do, has to pay four and a half times as much for the whisky on account of the taxes imposed by the Government as it costs the distiller from whom he buys it. The removal of this tax will therefore save a very large amount of money to the poor laboring class, who use and will continue to use, without regard to price, more or less whisky in their families every year. In that case, the reduction of the tax on whisky is as much a relief to the family as any other reduction of like amount, as a reduction of $10 per annum on the price of whisky they buy, leaves $10 in the family treasury to be paid out for some other necessaries which the family greatly need, and which they would not otherwise get.

But whether whisky is to be considered a necessary or a luxury, alcohol, its chief ingredient, which pays a tax in proportion to its purity and strength, is not only a necessary article for use in mechanics, but is an essential article in our drug stores in the preparation of medicines which are absolutely necessary both for the poor and the rich. In filling a great majority of prescriptions, and the preparation of medicines used for most diseases, alcohol is an essential part of the compound, and a tax on alcohol is a tax upon one of the most useful necessaries of life. Those who desire to remove an onerous tax from one of the commonest necessaries of the laboring classes, and indeed all classes of our people, should, it seems to me, vote to remove the tax from alcohol.

But it may be said that the repeal of the tax on whisky and the turning of everybody loose to make it who thinks proper to do so will bring the price down until it will be so cheap that there will be more drinking than there is at present. This is a mistake. Prior to the enactment of the internal-revenue laws, when the whisky used in this country was distilled by thousands of small distillers all through the mountains and valleys, there was no more drinking and no more drunkenness than there is at present. Those who used the whisky paid less for it and had more money left with which to pay for the support of their families, and the same would be true again if the present internal-revenue laws are repealed. It is true the whisky monopolists would not then run their present large distilleries and have the Government guard their whisky for them in warehouse for three years without expense to the distiller, as is now the case, but many of them would discontinue the business, and the small distillers would make whatever profit there is to be made in the business.

But I deny that this would cause any more distilled spirits to be made and used than are now made and used. The present Distillers' Association make seventy-six to eighty millions of gallons a year on an average. Take the year 1887, and according to the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue there were 58,096,621 gallons in bonded warehouse at the beginning of the fiscal year, and there were produced by the distillers during that year, in exact figures, 77,831,509 gallons, making a total for the year, distilled and in bonded warehouse, of 135,928,220 gallons.

Now, the Senate will bear in mind that the licensed distillers for the year 1886 sold all the whisky that anybody would buy, including the filling of all orders from abroad, and after disposing of all they could they had over 58,000,000 gallons left at the end of the year, to which they added nearly 78,000,000 by production during the year, making, in round numbers, 136,000,000 gallons on hand and produced during that year. Say that the population of the United States is now 60,000,000. This is about 2¼ gallons of whisky for each man, woman, and child, including the infant at the breast, made and held during the fiscal year 1887 by the licensed or registered distillers of this country. They therefore certainly prepared a liberal allowance for the people of the United States. No other system will keep more than that quantity on hand, tempting the people to use it, and no other system will keep anything like so large a quantity on hand when we reach a point where the owner has to guard and protect his own whisky and where it is no longer done for him by an agent paid by the Government of the United States.

The licensed distillers understand very well the demand of the market, both at home and abroad, for whisky, and they regulate it so as to keep enough on hand for everybody, and in the event they are making more than there is a demand for, they have, judging from the newspaper reports, a whisky "trust," as it is called, by which the association takes that matter in hand, and by a compact among themselves they agree not to make more than a certain quantity, which meets the demands of the market, but which does not bring down the price so as to take money out of the pockets of the members of the great whisky ring, and by the reduced price put it into the pockets of the people.

But it is said that the temperance people, or Prohibitionists, are opposed to the removal of the tax on whisky, as they fear it will increase the quantity and multiply the evils growing out of the use of intoxicating drinks.

Judging from the quantity that is made each year by the licensed distillers and by the quantity they keep in bonded warehouse, no system that can be adopted will surpass or probably equal them in amount of production and the amount of supply kept on hand. There is therefore no danger of increasing the quantity made and used by the people of the United States by the repeal of the present internal-revenue laws.

I should think that the Prohibitionists would very naturally desire the repeal of the revenue laws by the Congress of the United States, so as to leave the whole question under the control of the States, so that, in case the Prohibitionists should get the control of a State there would be no embarrassment growing out of licenses to distill and sell, granted by the Government of the United States, as is now the case. Remove all Federal interference with the manufacture and vending of ardent spirits, and you will have the matter entirely within hands of the States, where a majority of the people of each State can control it. If the Prohibitionists are right, and the majority of the people are with them, then they could ask nothing better than for the Government of the United States to take its hands off this traffic, and leave it entirely under the control of the States.

But it may be said that the license granted by the Federal Government does not protect a person who sells whisky, if it is prohibited by the law of the State where the sale is made. Without entering into a discussion of that point, it is enough to say, that persons would not take out and pay the United States for licenses to sell unless they expected to realize a profit by making sales under the licenses. Now, by reference to the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, it will be seen that in 1887 there were 183,490 persons licensed to sell spirits, as retail dealers, each paying $25 for the license, aggregating $4,587,268.21 license fees.

There were also 4,163 persons licensed as wholesale dealers, each paying $100 for the privilege, aggregating $416,304.66, which together make the sum of $5,003,572.87 paid into the Treasury of the United States by persons for licenses to sell as wholesale and retail dealers in spirituous liquors. Now, no one, whether Prohibitionist or anti-Prohibitionist, will suppose that nearly 190,000 persons would pay into the Treasury of the United States over $5,000,000 a year for license to sell liquors which they do not expect to use and which they do not make profitable. I presume I may safely say that there is not a prohibition State in the Union where there is not a large quantity of spirituous liquors sold by persons licensed by the United States.

The Prohibitionists, therefore, can surely have no objection to the passage of the law which will sweep these license laws from the statute-book. The National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, certainly the most important and influential temperance organization in this country, has taken unequivocal ground on this subject in favor of the repeal of the internal-revenue laws. In their convention held in Louisville in 1882 they resolved "that the internal-revenue taxes are wrong in principle, an outrage on the moral sentiment of the country, a quasi-indorsement of a pernicious traffic, and the legalizing, so far as the national Government can, of a business that is the source of most of our crime and poverty." In the convention of the same organization held at Nashville, Tenn., in November, 1887, Miss Frances E. Willard, the president of the organization, used this expression, speaking of the internal-revenue laws:

> To-day it stands as the strongest bulwark between the liquor traffic and annihilation. The amount of tax is almost equal to the annual surplus in the United States Treasury. Let both be wiped out together.

And this recommendation of the president of the association was fully indorsed by the association itself. The national Prohibition party in its platform in 1884 took the same position. So that there is no room for doubt as to where the Prohibitionists stand on this question. They favor unequivocally the repeal of the odious laws to which I have already referred.

But it is said that whisky and tobacco, whether luxuries or necessaries, are articles that the people of this country will use, and articles which, rather than be deprived of them, they will pay a heavy price for, and that it is therefore proper to impose a heavy tax on whisky and tobacco and make them bear a just proportion in the support of the Government. I fully concur in this proposition. One of the objections to the so-called prohibition laws of some of the States and cities of this country is that there is almost as much liquor sold and drank under the prohibition system as there is under the license system, the difference being that under the license system it pays a fair share of the burdens of government, while under the prohibition system, as the sale is supposed in legal contemplation not to exist, it pays nothing whatever.

My position is not that we shall have whisky and tobacco free and pay a high price for other necessaries, but that whisky and tobacco should be taxed heavily, and I agree with Mr. Jefferson that the tax should be imposed by the States and not by the Federal Government. Let a law be enacted in each State compelling each tax-payer when he gives in his taxes, under oath, to swear how many gallons of whisky or malt liquor he has made during the year, and let the law make it perjury for him to swear falsely. Let the State grant him a license to distill, and make it penal for him to vend any portion of the products of his distillery, without paying the tax and license-fee, and let there be stringent penal laws against illicit distillation or for failure to account for the quantity distilled, and let the tax for the quantity made within the State be paid into the treasury of the State and used for the reduction of the present State tax on the lands, agricultural implements, horses, mules, cattle, sheep, hogs, goats, and other property belonging to the citizens of each State. This would greatly lessen the tax upon all the implements and necessaries of farm life, and would be of more service to the farmers of this country than any reduction of tariff on wool hats, trace-chains, horseshoes, calico, and other commodities, which are now cheaper than they have ever been before, of which each farmer buys but a very limited quantity each year.

Take my own State as an illustration. During the twenty-two years since the war the State of Georgia has paid, on account of the internal-revenue laws, into the Treasury of the United States the sum of about $22,750,000, being about $1,000,000 a year paid by the people of Georgia under this system.

Now suppose we put a State tax upon these articles as heavy as that now levied by the Government of the United States, and the amount of revenue raised will almost pay the amount of direct tax collected from the people of Georgia for the support of the State government, and will leave the farmers and their plantations and live-stock and property almost free from taxation. This is a benefit which would not only be felt, but highly appreciated by the agricultural classes of all the States of the Union, and while the farmers would still pay their part of the tax on the whisky and tobacco they used, they would be relieved of a great portion of the tax they now pay. Now it goes into the Treasury of the United States, and they still have to pay their State tax. Then it would go into the treasury of the State and to that extent relieve them of the burden of State tax which they now pay in addition to the internal-revenue tax on whisky and tobacco.

Again, there is a large class of people who use whisky and tobacco freely, but who now pay no tax, because they have no visible property upon which it can be levied, who in future would have to pay a liberal share of the tax for the support of the government, and the amount paid in by them would be that much taken from the aggregate which is now raised by the other citizens of the State. In other words, the men who use the most whisky and tobacco under such a law would pay the heaviest tax to aid in the support of the State government.

Again, in the place of the present system of arresting a violator of the internal-revenue laws by the United States officials and carrying him a hundred miles to jail, and requiring half a dozen of his neighbors to attend court as witnesses, resulting in almost the ruin of each of them, the indictment for a violation would occur in the county in the State where the offense is committed. The defendant, if imprisoned at all, would be imprisoned in the common jail of his own county, and the witnesses would simply attend court in the county-seat of their own county, probably a day or two during the term, which they could do without any of the imposition and almost ruin to which they are now subjected under the present system, when they are dragged 50 or 100 miles from home to attend court; so that in every view of it, it would be better for the common laboring and farming classes of our people that these internal-revenue laws should be swept from the statute-book of the United States, and whisky and tobacco should be made to pay liberally their part in the support of the government of the States, and all indictments for violations of the law should be heard in the superior courts of the States, and not in the Federal courts. The more oppressive features of the internal-revenue laws would be eradicated by the proposed change, and whisky and tobacco would still be required to pay a liberal share of the direct taxes imposed upon the people for the support of the State governments.

Mr. President, the present system of internal-revenue laws of the United States is an outrageous system of espionage, injustice, and wrong. It ought to have been abolished long since, and there can certainly be no just reason for its longer continuance. We are anxiously inquiring how we can get rid of an amount of surplus that is flowing into the Treasury annually almost the equivalent of the amount collected under the internal-revenue system.

We do not need the money in the Treasury. We are not engaged in war, and there is no emergency that justifies its collection. Let us therefore return to the practice of the great men who formed this Government, and of the great men who administered it for many years, who, as soon as the emergency had passed which called forth the enactment of such laws, swept them from the statute-book; and let us without delay get rid of internal taxation by the Federal Government, with all its espionage, its trivial prosecutions, its oppressions, its outrages, and its wrongs.

This return to the old familiar practice of the fathers in the better days of the Republic will at once relieve us of the surplus in the Treasury, and relieve Congress and the Administration of all further embarrassment on that question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is now before the Senate; it will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. BECK. What has become of the resolutions of the Senator from Georgia?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Having been considered and the Senator from Georgia having made his observations, they lie on the table.

Mr. BROWN. I wish to move their reference to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BECK. I shall object to that. The Committee on Finance has no constitutional jurisdiction over these questions now; the House of Representatives alone can originate tax bills.

Mr. BROWN. I move, then, that the resolutions lie on the table for the present.

Mr. BECK. I want them to lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions are not now debatable. The unfinished business having been informally laid aside at 2 o'clock to enable the Senator from Georgia to conclude his speech, the resolutions now lie on the table.

Mr. BECK. Let them lie on the table. It may suit some Georgia moonshiners to be rid of the internal-revenue tax and prevent the money so realized going into the Treasury, for it all goes there, so as to impose a necessity for taxes in such a shape that three-fourths of the money will go into the pockets of some gentlemen out of the pockets of the laboring poor. I want to be heard on that question before it is acted on.

Mr. BROWN. The resolutions may lie on the table for the present.

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GEORGE. With the consent of the Senator from Missouri I desire to make a correction in the list of Democratic Senators who supported the pending bill, presented by me the other day. By accident the name of Mr. Walker, of Arkansas, was omitted from the list of Democratic Senators who favored the bill. I desire to put that on record.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Mississippi, with the permission of the Senator from Missouri, to one fact. In the list of Senators who voted for the bill, in the list he submitted to the Senate, the Senator quoted the name of the predecessor of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] and Mr. JONES also, which was somewhat a doubling up. They voted as the Senator declared, but not at the same time. I hope the Senator will make that correction also.

Mr. GEORGE. There is no correction needed on that subject. I stated the names of the Democratic Senators who had supported the bills in the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses.

Mr. HARRIS. But it made an aggregate of more Senators than ever voted at any one time the way the Senator from Mississippi stated.

Mr. GEORGE. There was no statement made by me that all those Senators voted at the same time, but I distinctly stated that this was a list of the Democratic Senators who voted for the measure in two different Congresses.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I want to state in that connection that my name does not appear as voting against the bill. I have not examined the RECORD, but I presume I was paired with a Senator who was on the opposite side of the question. I have been against this bill from the beginning. I was one of the six Senators who voted against it when first offered, when it was in a less objectionable form than at present; I voted against it when it was confined to an appropriation of public lands, or their proceeds.

If I were called upon Mr. President, to give a title to the pending bill I should describe it as "An act to erect a monument to the memory of Alexander Hamilton, and to encourage mendicancy in the Southern States."

I am not surprised that many Republican Senators warmly support this measure. It is no wonder the Republican party are anxious for its enactment. When suffrage was given to the ignorant negroes of the South it was with the firm belief on the part of the Republicans of the country that it would give them political supremacy in the Southern States. When a carnival of crime and corruption was inaugurated in the South by the white carpet-baggers who flocked like vultures to that unfortunate region, and when prostrate States writhed helpless under the feet of these adventurers, there was little sympathy on the part of those Republicans who now boast of their generosity in supporting this bill.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] told us during the Forty-eighth Congress that he did not put his support of this measure on the argument growing out of the right to appropriate money for the general welfare. "I do not go," he said, "into any subtle refinements as to any distinction between the right to give land and the right to give money. I undertake to say that the legislature of this nation has the right to save the life of this nation against whatever dangers may threaten it."

It seems to me that we have heard this language before, accompanied by the statement that the country had outgrown the Constitution, and that the young giant must now throw away the swaddling clothes made for it when an infant.

I am not surprised to hear this from Republican Senators, for the higher law has been the vade mecum of the Republican party since it came into existence.

I have no disposition to ascribe sinister motives to any one, but I must be permitted to say that it is cause for infinite regret that some of my Democratic colleagues, who have spent their lives in eloquent defense of a strict construction of the Constitution and of the doctrine that all appropriations of money should be governed by the express and necessarily implied grants of that instrument, have now abandoned these landmarks of our party before the great temptation presented by this bill. If the dead take any interest in the affairs of the living, what must be the surprise of John C. Calhoun when he sees the strict construction, hair-splitting, State-rights Democrats of the South wrapped up in the "general welfare" doctrine, which, as Sancho Panza said of sleep, "covers one all over as with a blanket," and yelling in both Houses of Congress "for the old flag and an appropriation."

I have no idea that anything I can say will change the inevitable result in this Chamber, for there are seventy-nine million reasons for the passage of this bill, so overwhelming and conclusive, that argument and appeal are equally useless against them.

Senator Benton said once of a kindred measure, "it comes into the Senate Chamber with money in every clause to pay its way through, as the souls of the damned arrived on the banks of the river Styx with money in hand to pay their way into hell. The surly Charon never refused a soul that had the money. In this polite assembly so munificent a bill can not be turned out of doors."

In my judgment, Mr. President, the greatest disaster that can ever come upon the people of the South, more terrible than war, pestilence, or famine, will be the enactment of this law. Whilst the glamour of universal education is thrown around this measure, its author, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] has distinctly told us its purpose in the following language:

> What have we (the Republican party) done to vindicate the ballot-box in the South? Since 1876 not one thing that is of tangible and practical value to the colored population to which we gave the franchise, but failed to give the common schools when we had control practically in the South. That colored population is turned over we know utterly, and must be forever unless reached by the introduction of schools which will reach both races alike. It is given over wholly and totally, and it is a settled fixed condition and status of that colored population of the South to-day that they are not voters, that they are not citizens as a rule. I believe that as thoroughly as the Senator from Nebraska, and speaking simply as a Republican politician, I assert that this measure should be enacted into a law for the purpose of spreading the principles of the Republican party and as the only possible way of doing it hereafter.

No language can be plainer than this. It strips off the disguise which rhetoric and statistics have thrown around this bill, and it stands forth from the utterance of its author a naked, bald design to obtain political power in the name of universal education. The Senator from New Hampshire expresses his regret that during the days of reconstruction, when the helpless South was completely at the mercy of the Republican party, this law was not enacted for political purposes.

Having failed by all other means to break up the solid South, the Republican leaders have now resorted to the expedient adopted by the wag, who, by throwing a handful of nuts into a convention of monkeys engaged in deliberation upon grave affairs of state, caused a general scramble to the neglect of all other business. But for the fact that we are supposed to have a large surplus in the national Treasury, and the further fact that the people of the South have been led to believe that this bill will distribute a large amount of this surplus in the Southern States, it would have no more chance in a Democratic Congress than a donation to the devil himself in a Christian congregation.

Before examining this measure further I call attention to the fact that not one line or word in the bill indicates its object to be the distribution of the surplus. The word "surplus" is nowhere found in the bill, but, on the other hand, its provisions clearly indicate that for a period of eight years the money collected from the people by taxation shall be returned in certain amounts to those from whom it came. There is no parallel between the circumstances by which we are surrounded now and those of 1836, when Congress considered the question of distributing twenty-eight millions of dollars lying idle in the national Treasury, among the States.

Mr. Calhoun and President Jackson both declared that to give Congress the power to make the distribution it would be necessary to adopt an amendment to the Federal Constitution.

The result of the debate had by the most distinguished statesmen then living was that the money which really constituted a surplus, there being no public debt and no great works of internal improvement, should be loaned to the States, to be returned to the National Government on demand. It is strange that President Jackson, who is now quoted by the advocates of this bill, was utterly oblivious of the extraordinary power claimed under the territorial and general-welfare clauses of the Constitution, both of which existed then as now.

Let it be distinctly understood that the present bill does not propose to distribute the surplus in the Treasury, or any part of it, but is a proposition to take the money raised from the people through a series of years by tariff and other taxation and distribute it amongst the States for educational purposes. Democratic Senators who are now urging a reduction of tariff taxation, and who are professing great anxiety to lessen the tax burden resting upon the people, should remember that their support of this measure necessitates the retention of these taxes to the amount of $79,000,000 for the next eight years.

A distinguished leader of the Republican party, their candidate for the Presidency in the last contest, attempted, it will be remembered, to protect the existing tariff, and to popularize himself at the same time by a scheme to distribute the taxes on whisky and tobacco amongst the States for educational purposes. The pending bill is but the appearance of the same idea in a different form, and I sincerely hope it will meet the same fate.

If the power to make this appropriation is constitutionally vested in Congress, then the same arguments which secure the passage of the present bill would unquestionably prove that the system should be made permanent.

The eighth section of the bill declares—

> That the design of this act is not to establish an independent system of schools, but rather to aid for the time being in the development and maintenance of the school system established by local government, and which must be eventually maintained by the States and Territories wherein they exist.

But I warn Senators that what is now declared to be only temporary must inevitably become a permanent system, and that it will be as impossible to discontinue the appropriation when once made as to withdraw from the confirmed inebriate the stimulus to which he has been accustomed for years. If I believed, as do the advocates of this bill, that Congress has the power to enact it into a law, and that the danger is so imminent as to threaten the existence of free institutions, I would vote, not for an appropriation during a term of eight years, but I would "make assurance doubly sure" by making the appropriation perpetual. If education belongs to the General Government, and not exclusively to the States, I do not see how we can escape the conclusion that the General Government should assume entire control of the subject.

Taxation in the States is direct, whilst that by the Federal Government is indirect, and on that account much less objectionable to the tax-payer. The constitutional power being conceded to pass the bill, why should we not make the system permanent and avoid the possibility of danger to the national life in the future?

The fountain of illiteracy will never be dried up, procreation will continue, and however intellectually precocious the children of the future may be, it is hardly possible that they will be born into the world able to read and write.

The power to enact this law is claimed by some of its advocates to be found under what is known as the territorial clause of the Constitution, which provides:

The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States.

It is claimed that there is no difference between the power of Congress to dispose of the public lands and its power to dispose of money in the Treasury. Very little examination is necessary to show the monstrous result of such reasoning. That the power of Congress over the public lands is without restriction has been settled by an overwhelming weight of authority. Chancellor Kent says in his Commentaries:

With respect to the vast territories belonging to the United States, Congress has assumed to exercise over these supreme powers of sovereignty. Exclusive and unlimited power of legislation is given to Congress by the Constitution and sanctioned by judicial decision.

In 14 Peters, 526, the Supreme Court of the United States declares—

That the power of Congress over the public lands is vested in Congress by the Constitution without limitation, and has been considered the foundation on which the Territorial governments rest.

Justice Story says:

The public lands hold out, after the discharge of the national debt, ample revenue to be devoted to the cause of education and sound learning and to internal improvement, without trenching upon the property or embarrassing the pursuits of the people by burdensome taxation. The constitutional objection to the appropriation of other revenues of the Government to such objects has been supposed to apply to an appropriation of the proceeds of the public lands.

The power of Congress over the public lands being unlimited, it is evident that the argument made by the advocates of this bill proves too much. If the framers of the Constitution meant that this clause by using the term "property" included money in the Treasury, then it follows irresistibly that the unlimited power of Congress to appropriate would apply to all money in the Treasury, and that the Government would be one of unlimited power.

If this construction be correct, then the other provisions of the Constitution which specify the purposes for which Congress may levy taxes, are absolutely unnecessary and meaningless.

It is urged, however, that Congress, possessing the unlimited power of disposition over the public lands, could appropriate the public money to the purchase of territory, and then give this territory so purchased, or its proceeds, to the cause of education or any other purpose, and thus bring about the same result.

It is safe to assume that the framers of the Constitution never anticipated or thought that any Congress could be elected by the American people which would thus deliberately violate their oaths of office by evading a provision of the Constitution.

Whether we consider the territorial clause which we have quoted, or that clause of the Constitution which provides that Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States, we are confronted in each instance with the inquiry whether the framers of the Constitution meant that the Government they established should be one of limited or unlimited power.

This was the question which divided the two great parties led respectively by Hamilton and Jefferson, and which was supposed to have been settled by the people of the United States in the election of Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe to be successively Presidents of the Republic.

History shows that the great leading idea of the men who made the Constitution was to establish a government with enumerated and not unlimited powers, and to make this certain they declared that the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

That the power to regulate and control education in the States was not given to the General Government, but is a domestic concern of the States only, will not be denied by any Senator on this side of the Chamber. If there is such a Senator here, I beg him to rise now and say to the contrary.

Whilst the position taken by the advocates of this bill as to the meaning of the territorial clause drives them to acknowledge that the Government is one of unlimited powers, and that Mr. Hamilton in his grave has at last triumphed, it is further contended that the general-welfare clause which we have quoted unquestionably gives the power to make this appropriation. It has even been asserted that Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, and Jackson admitted this construction.

I am not here to question motives or to lecture any one of my colleagues. Their action upon this bill is a matter for individual judgment and responsibility. But I solemnly protest against outraging the memories of these great Democratic Presidents by any such statement. If any Senator thinks proper to abandon the Democratic construction of the Constitution and adopt that of the Federalists, he is at liberty to do so, but he shall not, without my protest, carry with him the names of the great men who distinctly and emphatically repudiated the Hamiltonian idea that this was a government of unlimited powers.

I do not propose to go into ancient history or in this presence to make numerous citations, but Mr. Jefferson has been quoted in behalf of this blanket construction of the general-welfare clause. I quote now from Mr. Jefferson's writings as to a remarkable incident related by himself in 1804. It is well known that Mr Jefferson entered into President Washington's cabinet with great reluctance, his personal desire being to return to France, where he had been minister.

When he returned from Europe and landed at Norfolk he found a letter from President Washington asking him to become Secretary of State, and under a sense of public duty he accepted. When Hamilton made his celebrated report on manufactures, in which he asserted that under the general-welfare clause of the Constitution Congress could impose any tax it saw fit to protect the manufacturers of the United States, and that Congress had the power to enact any bill which it thought necessary to the general-welfare of the country, Jefferson, who had been restive under the attacks of the Federal party, called upon the President and tendered his resignation as Secretary of State. In February, 1792, Jefferson, then Secretary of State, declared to President Washington his intention to retire from the Cabinet, and, when pressed for his reasons, frankly stated that it was impossible for Colonel Hamilton and himself to continue together in the administration, and that now a proposition had been brought forward, the decision of which must definitely determine "whether we live under a limited or unlimited Government."

"To what proposition do you allude?" asked the President.

"To that," replied Jefferson, "in the report of manufactures (by Hamilton), which, under color of giving bounties for the encouragement of particular manufactures, meant to establish the doctrine that the Constitution, in giving power to Congress to provide for the general welfare, permitted Congress to take everything under their charge which they should deem for the public welfare. If this was maintained, then the enumeration of powers in the Constitution does not at all constitute the limits of their authority." (Writings of Jefferson, volume 9, page 104.)

Again, on September 9, 1792, Mr. Jefferson thus wrote to Washington from Monticello:

That I have utterly, in my private conversations, disapproved of the system of the Secretary of the Treasury (Hamilton), I acknowledge and avow, and this was not merely a speculative difference. His system flowed from principles adverse to liberty, and was calculated to undermine and demolish the Republic by creating an influence of his Department over the members of the Legislature. I saw this influence actually produced and its first fruits to be the establishment of the great outlines of his project by the votes of the very persons who, having swallowed his bait, were laying themselves out to profit by his plans; and that had these persons withdrawn, as those interested in a question should, the vote of the disinterested majority was clearly the reverse of what they made it. If what was actually doing begat uneasiness in those who wished for virtuous government, what was further proposed was not less threatening to the friends of the Constitution.

For in a report on the subject of manufactures (still to be acted on) it was expressly assumed that the General Government has a right to exercise all powers which may be for the general welfare, that is to say, all the legitimate powers of government; since no government has a legitimate right to do what is not for the welfare of the government. There was indeed a sham limitation of the universality of this power to cases where money is to be employed. But about what is it that money can not be employed?

I have heard the argument upon this floor that the power of appropriation followed the unlimited power of taxation, and there being no limit on the power to tax, therefore Congress had the power to appropriate those taxes as it pleased.

Mr Jefferson says:

Thus the object of these plans is to draw all the powers of government into the hands of the general legislature, to establish means for corrupting a sufficient corps in that legislature to divide the honest votes, and preponderate by their own the scale which suited, and to have the corps under the command of the Secretary of the Treasury, for the purpose of subverting, step by step, the principles of the Constitution which he has so often declared to be a thing of nothing which must be changed. (Jefferson's Works, volume 3, pages 461, 462.)

And again, in a letter to Albert Gallatin, Mr. Jefferson thus wrote:

The act was founded avowedly on the principle that the phrase in the Constitution which authorizes Congress "to lay taxes to pay the debt and provide for the general welfare" was an extension of the powers specifically enumerated to whatever would promote the general welfare; and this, you know, was the Federal doctrine. Whereas, our tenet ever was, and, indeed, it is almost the only landmark which now divides the Federalists from the Republicans, that Congress had not unlimited power to provide for the general welfare, but were restrained to those specifically enumerated; and that as it was never meant they should provide for that welfare, but by the exercise of the enumerated powers—

That is the Democratic doctrine to-day, and will be until our party shall cease to exist. Congress has no right to provide for the general welfare but by the exercise of enumerated powers—so it could not have been meant that they should raise money for purposes which the enumeration did not place under their action; consequently that the specification of powers is a limitation of the purpose for which they may raise money.

Am I compelled at this day to reiterate the declarations of the founder of the Democratic party, and of the father of the Constitution? An eloquent Senator from Georgia, whose voice is now stilled in death, once proclaimed in this Chamber that Mr. Madison knew more about that instrument than any other man who then lived or ever could live on this continent. I have studied the writings of Mr. Madison from boyhood up. He said our Constitution was an instrument of compromise. It forms a peculiar Government, sui generis, with no precedent. All ancient history furnished no precedents for the construction of the Constitution of the United States. Mr. Madison, the father of the Constitution, and the great constitutional lawyer of the convention which made it, and of the Congress that followed, has declared that it was monstrous to suppose that the Constitution created a government of unlimited powers.

When Mr. Hamilton's report on manufactures came before Congress in 1792, Mr. Madison said:

There are consequences, sir, still more extensive, which, as they follow clearly from the doctrine combated, must either be admitted, or the doctrine given up. If Congress can employ money indefinitely for the general welfare and are the sole and supreme judges of the general welfare, they may take the case of religion into their own hands; they may appoint teachers in every State, county, and parish, and pay them out of the public treasury; they may take into their own hands the education of children, establishing in like manner schools throughout the Union, etc.

It would seem, in considering these prophetic words, "that coming events cast their shadows before," and that Mr. Madison foresaw the attempt now being made by the pending bill.

Mr. Hamilton's position is in direct opposition to that of Jefferson and Madison. He contended "that Congress could be considered as only under one restriction which does not apply to other Governments. They can not apply the money they raise to any purpose merely and purely local, but with this exception they have as large a discretion in relation to the application of money as any legislature whatever."

It is evident that under this construction the powers of Congress are unlimited, for the body which enacts the law is the only tribunal to determine whether its purpose is national or local, and when its discretion is once exercised there is no appeal. Religion, education, temperance, chastity, not being of local character, could be regulated by Congress.

Instead of the Constitution creating a dual government, the National Government with certain enumerated powers and the States with other powers, Mr. Hamilton's idea was that the only limitation upon the power of Congress rested upon the single inquiry, whether the object of the law was national or local.

It is true that President Monroe went further than Jefferson or Madison, and admitted the right of Congress to go beyond the enumerated powers of appropriation specified in the Constitution, but he never went so far as the advocates of this bill, or as the great founder of the Federal party, Mr. Hamilton.

The following language on the Cumberland Road bill shows the full extent to which he ever went upon this question:

If, then, the right to raise and appropriate the public money is not restricted to the expenditures under the other specified grants, according to a strict construction of either powers, respectively, is there no limitation to it? Have Congress a right to raise and appropriate the public money to any and every purpose, according to their will and pleasure? They certainly have not. The Government of the United States is a limited government, instituted for great national purposes, and for those only. Other interests are committed to the States, whose duty it is to provide for them. Each government should look to the great and essential purpose for which it was instituted, and confine itself to those purposes.

Again, General Jackson, who could not find in the Federal Constitution the power to distribute the $28,000,000 in the Treasury in 1836—and the territorial and general-welfare clauses then stood as they stand to-day—in his veto message on the Maysville Road bill, in speaking of the power of Congress to appropriate money to objects other than those mentioned in the enumerated power, says:

Yet, such grants have always been professedly under the control of the general principle that the work which might be thus aided should be of a general, not local, national, not State, character. A disregard of this distinction would of necessity lead to the subversion of the Federal system.

And, sir, the question now is when we are called upon to exercise a doubtful power, to which class does it belong? Does it belong to the enumerated national powers or to those of the States? Is it a power which was given to the National Government, or is it a power which was reserved to the States or the people thereof?

To quote Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, or Jackson in favor of the Hamiltonian doctrine is a monstrous outrage unsupported by a single declaration from either of these eminent men.

They believed and contended, as true Democrats believe and contend now everywhere, that the grants enumerated in the Constitution limit the power of Congress to appropriate the public money, and that the Government is not one of unlimited powers.

It is no answer to this argument that many of us have voted for bills of doubtful constitutionality under plaintive and eloquent appeals in behalf of sufferers from flood or famine, or where epidemic diseases threatened to become general in their ravages throughout the country. I have been taunted with votes of this character by gentlemen to whose eloquence I gave up my own judgment for the time. For one, I am prepared to say now that if I had known the mischievous use for which those votes would be used as precedents and arguments for such legislation as that now pending, I could not have been induced by any sort of appeal to surrender, even by implication, my settled convictions as to the power of Congress. And if a public apology can do anything towards meeting the argument based upon those votes, I now make it.

I have already said that this bill should be entitled "An act to erect a monument to the memory of Alexander Hamilton." It breathes the spirit of centralization and paternal government in every section and line. It provides in section 4:

SEC. 4. That no State or Territory shall receive any money under this act until the governor thereof shall file with the Secretary of the Interior a statement, certified by him, showing the common-school system in force in such State or Territory; the amount of money expended therein during the last preceding school year in the support of common schools, not including expenditures for the rent, repair, or erection of school-houses; whether any discrimination is made in the raising or distribution of the common-school revenues or in the common-school facilities afforded between the white and colored children therein, and, so far as is practicable, the sources from which such revenues were derived; the manner in which the same were apportioned to the use of the common schools; the number of white and colored children in each county or parish and city between the ages of ten and twenty-one years, both inclusive, as given by the census of 1880, and the number of children, white and colored, of such school age attending school; the number of schools in operation in each county or parish and city, white and colored; the school term for each class; the number of teachers employed, white and colored, male and female, and the average compensation paid such teachers; the average attendance in each class; and the length of the school term. No money shall be paid out under this act to any State or Territory that shall not have provided by law a system of free common schools for all of its children of school age, without distinction of race or color, either in the raising or distributing of school revenues or in the school facilities afforded: Provided, That separate schools for white and colored children shall not be considered a violation of this condition. The Secretary of the Interior shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the States and Territories which he finds to be entitled to share in the benefits of this act, and also the amounts due to each.

In section 12 it is provided:

SEC. 12. That no second or subsequent allotment shall be made under this act to any State or Territory unless the governor of such State or Territory shall first file with the Secretary of the Interior a statement, certified by him, giving a detailed account of the payments or disbursements made of the school fund apportioned to his State or Territory and received by the State or Territorial treasurer or officer under this act, and of the balance in the hands of such treasurer or officer withheld, unclaimed, or for any cause unpaid or unexpended, and also the amount expended in such State or Territory as required by section 9 of this act, and also a statement of the number of school districts in such State or Territory, and whether any portion of such State or Territory has not been divided into school districts or other territorial subdivisions for school purposes, and if so, what portion, and the reasons why the same has not been so subdivided; the number of children of school age in each district, and the relative number of white and colored children in each district, and of the number of public, common, and industrial schools in each district; the number of teachers employed; the rate of wages paid; the total number of children in the State or Territory, and the total number taught during the year and in what branches instructed; the average daily attendance and the relative number of white and colored children; and the number of months in each year schools have been maintained in each school district. And if any State or Territory shall misapply or allow to be misapplied, or in any manner appropriated or used other than for the purposes and in the manner herein required, the funds, or any part thereof, received under the provisions of this act, or shall fail to comply with the conditions herein prescribed, or to report as herein provided, through its proper officers, the disposition thereof, and the other matters herein prescribed to be so reported, such State or Territory shall forfeit its right to any subsequent apportionment by virtue hereof until the full amount so misapplied, lost, or misappropriated shall have been replaced by such State or Territory and applied as herein required, and until such report shall have been made: Provided, That if the public schools in any State admit pupils not within the ages herein specified, it shall not be deemed a failure to comply with the conditions herein. If it shall appear to the Secretary of the Interior that the funds received under this act for the preceding year by the State or Territory have been faithfully applied to the purposes contemplated by this act, and that the conditions thereof have been observed, then and not otherwise the Secretary of the Interior shall distribute the next year's appropriation as is hereinbefore provided. And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to promptly investigate all complaints lodged with him of any misappropriation by or in any State or Territory of any moneys received by such State or Territory under the provisions of this act, or of any discrimination in the use of such moneys; and the said complaints, and all communications received concerning the same, and the evidence taken upon such investigations, shall be preserved by the Secretary of the Interior, and shall be open to public inspection and annually reported to Congress.

Now let us examine very briefly the practical operation of this law. Suppose the governor of the State of Mississippi files his report to the Secretary of the Interior as required by the provisions of section 4; in the mean time the General Government has passed under the control of the Republican party, and whilst this report is pending a negro massacre is charged to have occurred within that State. Resolutions are immediately introduced in both Houses of Congress calling upon the Secretary to suspend the payment of the pro rata amount going to Mississippi under the provisions of this law, and for a committee of inquiry.

It will be, of course, denied that the amount appropriated has been justly and equitably divided between the white and colored children of the State, and witnesses will be forthcoming to prove it. The result will inevitably be that a sovereign State must stand uncovered before the Secretary of the Interior, pleading and begging for justice, a spectacle which should gladden the soul of every true Federalist.

Mr. President, I favor universal education, and I would be glad if every child in the United States, without distinction as to sex or color, could be taught to read and write; but this is not all of education. There is something above and beyond the mere ability to read and write; the highest education is that which teaches self-respect and individual independence. Without this individuals and communities must deteriorate.

The overruling idea of the men who made the Constitution was that the States should be independent of the Federal Government as to all functions and powers given to them, and when the States are compelled to appear for cross-examination and as suppliants for so much money, the idea is absolutely destructive of their independence.

Committees of inquiry, and espionage of the most humiliating kind, with swarms of Federal spies and inspectors, will follow the enactment of this law. Dependence means degradation, and the first step in that direction has been taken when the people of the South can entertain for a moment the propositions contained in this bill.

It is useless for Senators to conceal from themselves the meaning of this measure. It is intended to destroy the entire common-school system of the States, and to put upon it the stamp of Federal authority. Whilst the bill declares in one section that its object is to assist the States, and not to establish an independent system of education, its other provisions contradict the assertion. The leaders of the Republican party know its meaning, and what they mean in supporting it.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] said when the bill was debated in the Forty-eighth Congress:

> I said a moment ago, and I repeat it with full reflection, that I do not think the United States, when they come to deal with this matter, ought to trust the settlement of the important questions that grow out of this new policy to the action of the people of the Southern States, because the force of prejudice, the force of education, is so strong and potent, even on the minds of the most intelligent men, that I do not believe the United States would act wisely in conferring upon the Southern States absolute power over education and the expenditure of the money involved in it. I say this, not in any feeling of unkindness to the people of the South, but from a deep conviction that owing to the prejudices of race, owing to the influences of slavery still darkening the minds—> and which, probably, will darken their minds for two or three generations, they can not be left alone to decide how and in what manner the money to be appropriated by Congress for the education of the illiterate shall be applied. The policy and mode should be pointed out clearly by Congressional law, so that the object to be accomplished by the United States may be fixed, not by the law of any State, but by the judgment of the representatives of the people and of the States.

That is, by Congress, of course. Pursuing the subject, Mr. SHERMAN further said:

> The United States, when it appropriates money, selects an agent to disburse this money of its own, and may make conditions. If the United States have the right to appropriate the money, they have the right to say on what conditions the money shall be expended. If they say we will aid the South or the Southern States to educate their illiterate children, then the United States have the power and the right to set out the principles and conditions or limitations of that grant. The greater includes the less; and if the power is given to make these appropriations at all, the power is also given to say for whose benefit the money shall be expended, where and when and how appropriated, and for what purposes. This is as clear a proposition as any can be shown in Euclid or any other mathematical work.—Congressional Record, March 26, 1884, pages 2428, 2429.

If this bill does not put the whole common-school system under the control of the General Government, somebody is egregiously mistaken, and it is safe to say that it is not the Senator from Ohio.

After the Southern States have once come under the influence of the Federal stimulant, after they have erected school-houses and employed teachers, and become accustomed to depending upon Federal appropriations, does any sane man believe that they will exert themselves as now for their common schools, or dare to incur the displeasure of the national authority?

Home rule, self-government, State independence, will all give way before the craving for more appropriations. To accept money under the terms of this bill is to surrender all that makes State authority respectable.

I am the sincere friend of education, but I do not believe that the millennium predicted by the author of this measure will follow its enactment. The ability to read and write will not decrease crime in the ratio stated by certain enthusiasts, nor is illiteracy strangling the Republic like some immense serpent coiled about its victim.

The Republican Senators now rushing this bill to its passage ought to have thought of this monster before giving suffrage to the ignorant and half-civilized negroes.

Now they stand upon a pedestal, and pretend to be horror-stricken at the result of their own policy. The real horror comes from the fact that the Southern States still vote the Democratic ticket. Republican statesmen openly proclaim negro suffrage a failure, and piteously lament that, whilst it has increased the representation of the Southern States, it has also increased the electoral vote of their political opponents.

We are asked now to support a measure of at least doubtful constitutionality because the life of the nation is in imminent danger from illiteracy, and this Hall resounds with declamation in behalf of education, and in depicting the increase of crime and poverty by reason of illiteracy in the Southern States.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] has placed before us immense tables of statistics taken from the census of 1880, with long lines of figures drilled and arranged like the standing armies of Europe, all showing that illiteracy and crime go hand in hand, whilst morality and education are twin sisters.

I hope that I may be pardoned for calling attention to certain startling statistics taken from the same census of 1880, which I offer as a supplement to the copyrighted edition of my friend from New Hampshire.

The rule of law is unquestioned that a witness put upon the stand for any purpose is subject to examination as to the whole case. This census is the foundation of all the argument made by the Senator from New Hampshire, and I have a legitimate right, without being the opponent of universal education, to examine the statements of the census to see what credit should be given to it. I do so the more cheerfully because in all the wilderness of figures he has furnished I find nowhere what is most important in this discussion, the effect of common-school education, as shown by the census, upon crime and the morality of the people.

I ask attention to the following table, carefully compiled from the census of 1880:

Table showing the comparative diffusion of common-school instruction, and morality, in the United States, from the census of 1880.

| States. | Total population over ten years. | | | | Native population over ten years. | | | |

| West Virginia | 121 | 1,087 | 24 | 6 | 186 | 1,325 | 29 | 14 |
| Wisconsin | 40 | 1,614 | 8 | 1 | 20 | 1,671 | 7 | 10 |

It will be seen by an examination of this table that of all the States in the Union Iowa's entire population is best instructed. There are in Iowa only 24 in 1,000 who can not read, whilst in South Carolina there are 482 in 1,000 of the entire population who can not read. In Iowa 1 in every 1,442 is a prisoner, whilst in South Carolina 1 in every 1,039 is a prisoner.

Whilst the difference in common instruction is so enormous in favor of Iowa, being as 20 to 1, the difference of crime in favor of Iowa is only as 7 to 5.

The ten States of the Union which lead in the matter of common-school instruction rank as follows: Iowa, Nebraska, Maine, Kansas, Ohio, Minnesota, Michigan, Wisconsin, Oregon, and New York. Of these ten States Wisconsin is 1st in morality and 8th in instruction.

I call attention to the fact that these States all belong to the same class. I know it will be said when comparing Southern with Northern States that the laws are so much better enforced in the North than in the South that the parallel does not hold; but here are States of the same climatic condition, with the same class of population, and with no negroes.

Wisconsin is 1st in morality, 8th in instruction; Iowa is 2d in morality, 1st in instruction; Minnesota is 3d in morality, 6th in instruction; Maine is 4th in morality, 3d in instruction; Ohio is 5th in morality, 5th in instruction; Nebraska is 6th in morality, 2d in instruction; Michigan is 7th in morality, 7th in instruction; Oregon is 8th in morality, 9th in instruction; Kansas is 9th in morality, 4th in instruction; New York is 10th in morality, 10th in instruction.

I call attention to the fact that when these States are compared with each other, all of them being what are known as free States, it will be seen that Wisconsin is high in morality, but low in instruction; Nebraska and Kansas are low in morality, but high in instruction. In three only of these States do the figures indicate that crime is commensurate with illiteracy.

The ten most illiterate States are Tennessee, Arkansas, Virginia, Florida, North Carolina, Mississippi, Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, and South Carolina.

South Carolina is 1st in morality, 10th in instruction; Arkansas is 2d in morality, 2d in instruction; Virginia is 2d in morality, 3d in instruction; Florida is 4th in morality, 4th in instruction; Alabama is 5th in morality, 8th in instruction; Louisiana is 6th in morality, 9th in instruction; North Carolina is 7th in morality, 5th in instruction; Georgia is 8th in morality, 7th in instruction; Mississippi is 9th in morality, 6th in instruction; Tennessee is 10th in morality, 1st in instruction.

It will be noticed that of these States, which were all slave States, South Carolina, whilst the most illiterate, is the most moral, and Tennessee, with the highest education, is the most criminal. In only three of these States is crime commensurate with illiteracy.

The foregoing figures are based upon the total school population in the States mentioned, and whilst it will be found that there is a considerable difference of morality in favor of the better instructed States, it is also true that the greater criminality of the illiterate States is not in proportion to their illiteracy.

Wisconsin, whilst not the best instructed, is the best of the first group in morality, whilst Tennessee is seven times as illiterate but only three and one-half times as criminal as Wisconsin.

If we consider now the white population only, we find that in Massachusetts there are only 7 in 1,000 unable to write, whilst in North Carolina there are 317 in 1,000 who can not write, and yet according to the census there is more than twice as much crime among the native white population of Massachusetts as among the same class in North Carolina.

Of all the States as to native whites, Massachusetts ranks 1st in instruction and 35th in morality; Connecticut ranks 2d in instruction and 25th in morality; New Hampshire ranks 3d in instruction and 16th in morality; Nevada ranks 4th in instruction and 38th in morality; Maine ranks 5th in instruction and 11th in morality; Minnesota ranks 6th in instruction and 19th in morality; Wisconsin ranks 7th in instruction and 10th in morality; Delaware ranks 24th in instruction and 3d in morality; Florida ranks 31st in instruction and 1st in morality; South Carolina ranks 32d in instruction and 2d in morality; Kentucky ranks 33d in instruction and 8th in morality; North Carolina ranks 38th in instruction and 23d in morality.

The figures in regard to Massachusetts and North Carolina have been given. The figures for the other States are equally important and suggestive. Thus, in Connecticut only 10 in 1,000 are unable to write; in New Hampshire, only 11. In South Carolina, 224 in 1,000 can not write; in Florida, 207. In Connecticut, 1 in every 837 is a prisoner; in New Hampshire, 1 in every 1,161. In South Carolina, 1 in every 5,203 is a prisoner; in Florida, 1 in every 5,731. That is to say, in Connecticut and New Hampshire ability to write is twenty times as extensive among the native white population as it is in South Carolina and Florida, yet there is five times as much crime in proportion in Connecticut and New Hampshire as there is in South Carolina and Florida.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to ask a single question at that point, which may throw a little light on these statistics. Suppose that a State never prosecuted anybody for crime, it would stand first in the table for morality?

Mr. VEST. I have attempted to answer that proposition by comparing States which belong to the same class, with the same institutions and the same climatic condition. I grant that point would be well taken if I compared only States in the South with States in the North, but I compare Southern States with Southern States and Northern States with Northern States, and I show from this census, which, if it is worth anything, proves what I say, that illiteracy and crime do not go together. I take States which are exactly alike in all their conditions, and I show as between those States that the best educated State is not the best governed State and not the most moral.

Mr. BLAIR. When the Senator is through on that point I wish to call his attention to one aspect of the matter; and I shall do so now, if agreeable to him.

Mr. VEST. I do not wish to have a speech injected into mine.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like before the Senator leaves this point to suggest one thing for his consideration.

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not know in regard to this comparison of States as between themselves, but I have examined this matter in the individual States, and it has been a subject of careful examination by those who have given attention to it in many different nations. It has always been found to be the case that in a given community a very much larger proportion of crime was committed by the illiterate than by the educated people of the same community. In the State of New York, for instance, of the crime committed in that State there is at least nine times as large a proportion committed by illiterates as by educated people, comparing the relative numbers of the two classes, and that is true of every State; it is true of every nation.

I have statistics which at the proper time I shall submit to the Senator's examination, showing that wherever an illiterate population and an educated population live together in the same community, under the same conditions, crime is committed by the illiterate population to at least ten times the proportion that it is committed by the educated population.

Mr. VEST. It is greatly to be regretted, without attributing any indirect motive to the author of this bill, that with all his vast labor, with his statistics bewildering and labyrinthine, he stumbled over the very question which every legislator must first consider. What is the effect of illiteracy upon government? What is the effect upon crime? In all these tables he has not given what he says is at his fingers' end.

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator will look at the twenty-seventh page of the same pamphlet he will find it given very elaborately.

Mr. VEST. As to the effect?

Mr. BLAIR. As to the relative crime committed by the literate and illiterate classes.

Mr. VEST. But I mean a comparison between the States.

Mr. BLAIR. That is not pertinent to the discussion.

Mr. VEST. I am not here attacking education; I am here attacking the correctness of the deduction which the Senator makes from this census. I very much believe that you can take the census and prove anything out of it.

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator will permit me there is nothing in any of the tables instituting any comparison between illiteracy and crime, and no argument that I have made with reference to this bill calls for any such comparison. What I have incorporated here has been before the Senate for a long time in this pamphlet, the elaborated deduction of a distinguished gentleman from New York; indeed, of two gentlemen. The Senator can find it on the twenty-sixth and twenty-seventh pages of the pamphlet, and I call the attention of other Senators to that same matter.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, it is not necessary to pursue the discussion and run the figures over to show that they prove certain things; they prove too much for the purpose of the other side. They prove that illiteracy and crime do not go together in the ratio claimed. That I purpose to establish by the very authority claimed by the Senator from New Hampshire. I am not attacking education, but I am attacking the monstrous claim that this bill is a panacea for all the evils which afflict the body politic. Many things create crime—the climate, the general conditions of life, nativity, density of population—and yet to listen to the speeches made on this floor for the last four years here is the universal panacea, the philosopher's stone politically that solves every doubt with regard to the future of this country. It does not do it. I should like to educate the people. If education does not make every man better, it makes him more useful and a better political agent in the creation of material wealth. When any man or any set of men undertake to tell me that they have discovered the great secret of the art of governing mankind in one single omnibus measure like this, I hope I shall be excused for entering a slight dissent.

Another singular fact is apparent from these tables, that in Pennsylvania, Illinois, Missouri, Ohio, Colorado, and Kentucky, whilst the entire populations, white, colored, native and foreign, are better instructed, they are more criminal than the native white populations.

These States differ largely; some of them are manufacturing States and some of them agricultural; some have large cities and some have none, but the census shows that they agree in one respect, namely, their native white populations are at once more ignorant and more moral than their entire populations. If we now eliminate the immigrant class and compare the native whites of Louisiana, Florida, South Carolina, Kentucky, Georgia, and Alabama with the native whites of the well-instructed States of Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Hampshire, Nevada, Minnesota, and Maine, we find that the more ignorant are the more moral.

In Massachusetts one in every 473 is a prisoner, and in Florida one in 5,734.

If we compare States belonging to the same class, such as Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Florida, we find that Virginia is 1st in instruction but 2d in morality; North Carolina is 2d in instruction and 3d in morality; South Carolina is 4th in instruction and 1st in morality, whilst Georgia is 3d in instruction and 4th in morality.

If we are met with the statement that these remarkable figures are produced by the better administration of justice in the Northern States, we reply that this objection is answered by the fact that crime and illiteracy do not go together in States which belong to the same section and have the same institutions, such as the four we have last named. South Carolina, for instance, stands first in morals and third in education, whilst Georgia is less ignorant but more criminal.

If we consider the Northeastern States, we find that Maine is better instructed and less criminal than New Hampshire, whilst Connecticut is better instructed but more criminal than either Vermont or Rhode Island.

If we consider the native white population only in these States, Maine is more ignorant and less criminal than New Hampshire; New Hampshire is better educated but slightly less criminal than Vermont, and Vermont has double the illiteracy of Connecticut, but is much better in morals. At the same time, Connecticut is much better instructed than Rhode Island, but slightly better in morals.

If we pass to the Southwest, we find that Arkansas is more ignorant but much less criminal than Texas, and in the Northwest we find that Iowa's total population is better instructed and more criminal than Wisconsin, whilst as to the native whites Wisconsin is better instructed and less criminal than Iowa.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator be kind enough to state for the information of the Senate what is the precise statistic which he speaks of as the statistic of morality or criminality?

Mr. VEST. I stated that.

Mr. HOAR. I beg the Senator's pardon; my attention was called away when he stated it.

Mr. VEST. The census of 1880 undertakes to find out the morality of the people of the respective States by the number of prisoners.

Mr. HOAR. By the number of prisoners?

Mr. VEST. By the charges made of a criminal character of all sorts, both felonious and misdemeanors.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator states in one sentence two different things. First, he says the number of criminals; second, he says the charges made of a criminal character. What I wish to understand, if I am not disturbing the Senator, is whether the statistics which he gives are the enumeration of persons convicted of crime, the enumeration of persons charged with crime, or the enumeration of persons sent to prison for crime? What are the figures of?

Mr. VEST. As I understand, the census enumerators simply reported the number of persons who were indicted or charged with crime and arrested. They did not undertake to go through the record and find who had been convicted.

Mr. HOAR. So if one State, for instance, makes drunkenness, or, as we had in Boston for a great many years, smoking in the streets an offense, and another State does not, the five thousand persons arrested in Boston for smoking in the streets would be counted under that class and would not be counted in Portsmouth, N. H.?

Mr. VEST. I do not know but that such is the case. I know that there is a large number of very respectable people in this country who think drunkenness is a very much greater crime than some of the felonies, and they are now proposing to legislate on that idea. De gustibus non est disputandum.

Mr. HOAR. I did not propose to interrupt the Senator, but I wished to ask him to state the precise statistics.

Mr. VEST. I take these figures as they occur; I am not responsible for them.

Mr. HOAR. I did not criticise the figures; I merely wanted to understand them.

Mr. VEST. I did not frame the census act. I had very little to do with appointing enumerators. This census is brought here as the fountain of all argument in favor of this bill, and I am simply finding out what it proves altogether.

If we consider the thirteen original States of the Union, and compare the native white population, we find that Massachusetts is better instructed but more criminal than New York, Pennsylvania, or Maryland. New York is next to Massachusetts in point of instruction. Pennsylvania is better instructed but more criminal than Maryland, the latter State being of the four we have named the most ignorant and the most moral.

In the remaining nine of the thirteen original States Connecticut is 1st in instruction, but more criminal than any of the others, except Rhode Island and New Jersey. New Hampshire is 2d in instruction, but more criminal than either South Carolina, Delaware, Georgia, or Virginia. This fact I commend particularly to the distinguished author of this bill.

Rhode Island is 3d in instruction, but worse in morals than any except New Jersey, which is worst of all in morals, but 4th in education. North Carolina is the most ignorant, but 6th in morals. Georgia stands 8th in education, but 3d in morals; South Carolina is 7th in education, but 1st in morals; whilst of the whole thirty-eight States Florida, in respect to the native whites, is most moral, and South Carolina is next.

I wish to say here that I have no doubt in the world the statistics in regard to New Jersey came not from illiteracy, but in a large measure from the peculiar locality of that State, with the two great cities of the Union upon each side of it, with Philadelphia on one side and New York on the other, and with a dense population, many of them in manufacturing districts.

Mr. McPHERSON. The Senator will bear with me for a moment. While I do not wish to interrupt him, it would be perhaps well for me to say a word in that connection in regard to the State of New Jersey, that it may be better understood than the Senator is now leaving us to understand. For instance, some of the little towns along the seashore which have a resident population of two or three thousand people will have during the summer months a registered population of perhaps 70,000 or 80,000 people. Some of them come from the Senator's own State, I believe, as it is almost the only place in the Union where people can keep cool in summer. I have distinct recollection of several Missourians having been arrested at Long Branch last summer for some default in respect to their conduct.

As the Senator says, the State of New Jersey is sandwiched, so to speak, between the great States of Pennsylvania and New York. On Sundays there is a great exodus from both those States to the State of New Jersey. Our police force must needs be increased four or five fold in order to keep these alien citizens in something like good order. As the Senator has already said, his statement is based upon the number of arrests which represents the crime. Certainly I have known our jails and every place of moral reform that we have located along the seashore, along the line between these two great States, to be filled on Monday morning with prisoners.

Therefore I say the statement is not fair with respect to New Jersey, for New Jersey does stand about as high in point of educational facilities as any State in the Union. I think there is but a small difference between New Jersey and New York.

Mr. VEST. I tried to say that. I tried to convey the same idea, that it was possibly this peripatetic population which has increased the ratio of arrests for crime in New Jersey. I have no doubt Missouri has contributed to that end by some of her people going to New Jersey and remaining until they have forgotten their moral education in their own State and furnished an illustration of the old axiom that "evil communications corrupt good manners."

It is not my purpose in presenting these figures, taken from the census of 1880, and for which I am not at all responsible, to depreciate the value of common-school education; but it is my purpose to show the monstrous exaggeration and the fanatic enthusiasm which have pervaded the discussion of this bill, and that the census, from which its friends draw their arguments, proves too much.

It has been assumed here in debate and in the public press that illiteracy was the great fountain of crime, and that universal education would be accompanied by universal morality.

These tables show beyond question that there are other factors besides education to be considered in this discussion. Religion, nativity, climate, density of population, and many other factors, enter into the question, and for any man or set of men to claim the discovery of a panacea for all the ills which afflict the body politic, is simply nonsense.

I am willing and anxious to educate the people of this country, but I propose to do it with the instrumentalities pointed out by the Constitution, and not to destroy that instrument by following blindly and without question every new evangel which comes with education as its shibboleth.

It would be supposed, Mr. President, from what we have heard upon this floor and throughout the country, that illiteracy is strangling in its serpent folds all prosperity and energy in the Southern States. I have before me now, taken from the Manufacturers' Review, of Baltimore, a statement in regard to the progress of the South during the past year, which absolutely disproves this monstrous assertion.

Of the fourteen Southern States, there are only four in which capital invested in new enterprises is not double the amount invested in 1886.

Think of that! But four in these poor, miserable States, now groaning under this terrible load of illiteracy! A wonderful people that white population must be! The ancient Romans, who carried their eagles in conquest to the farthest confines of the then known world, must pale their glories before the white men of the South, if they are to be judged by the statistics of my friend from New Hampshire. If, with their black illiterates they still doubled their wealth during the past year, io triumphe to the Huguenot and Anglo-Saxon people who inhabit the plains and savannahs of the South! I am prouder to-day of my people and my lineage after this development than ever before, and I stand here, as a Southern man, to proclaim that if this census and these reports are reliable, no such people have ever been known on the face of the earth.

The number of new enterprises organized or established during 1887 is 3,430, as compared with 1,570 in 1886. The amount of capital, including capital stock of incorporated companies organized during 1887, is $256,298,000, as compared with $126,226,000 in 1886.

Seventy-seven new mills have been projected, many of them being now under construction, which is the largest number ever reported in one year. Cotton-mills have largely oversold their production, and many old mills are being enlarged to meet the demand for their goods. Alabama alone has secured during the year the location of five large car-building establishments, two at Decatur, and one each at Birmingham, Anniston, and Gadsden. The Anniston works have cost $1,000,000, and employ 1,000 mechanics, and will turn out twenty complete cars a day, comprising passenger, freight, parlor, and sleeping cars, the entire work, from wheels to upholstering, to be done in these shops.

In the building of rolling-mills, pipe-works, machine-shops, and foundries the same activity is seen, while furniture factories, agricultural-implement works, flour-mills, gas and electric works, canning factories, and wood-working establishments are being started in all the Southern States.

In South Carolina a review of the year just ended shows an increase in agricultural, mining, and manufacturing products from $72,000,000 in 1880, to $101,000,000 in 1887. The increase in manufactures has been 91 per cent., and in live-stock 61 per cent. There are now in the State three thousand manufacturing establishments, whilst the product of the phosphate mines has grown from 125,000 tons in 1880, to 432,000 tons in 1887.

Nor is this wonderful progress confined to material wealth. Equal advance has been made in education, until it can be confidently asserted from actual experience that the Southern States are able, without becoming mendicants, to educate all the children within their limits.

It is true that a large number of illiterates in these States can never be reached by the pending bill or any other means.

Out of the 4,715,495 persons in the South in 1880 over ten years of age who could not write, 2,961,371, or about two-thirds, were men and women over twenty-one years old and beyond the reach of legislation.

This simple statement eliminates in one sentence much of the sensational declamation for the passage of this bill.

The following table, compiled from the reports of school superintendents in the respective States and published in the New York Evening Post, shows that the Southern States have a common-school system supported by their own people equal to that of Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont from 1860 to 1870, and which proved sufficient for the advanced civilization of New England:

| State. | Per cent. enrolled. | Average daily attendance. | Length of school year in days. | Amount expended per pupil. |
| Maine | 69 | 68 | 104 | $7.75 |
| New Hampshire | 64 | 71 | 100 | 9.63 |
| Vermont | 72 | 68 | 126 | 8.37 |
| Delaware | 77 | 61 | 157 | 6.88 |
| Maryland | 55 | 51 | 182 | 10.09 |
| Virginia | 52 | 57 | 120 | 4.59 |
| West Virginia | 73 | 61 | 100 | 5.99 |
| Missouri | 68 | 75 | 113 | 8.13 |
| Texas | 79 | ..... | 100 | 6.78 |
| Florida | 93 | 73 | 90 | 5.37 |
| Tennessee | 61 | 59 | 78 | 3.73 |
| Minnesota | 62 | 45 | 112 | 12.63 |
| Kansas | 74 | 68 | 115 | 9.50 |
| Nebraska | 66 | 60 | 120 | 13.39 |
| Alabama | 56 | 62 | 83 | 2.30 |
| Mississippi | 60 | 58 | 77½ | 3.01 |
| South Carolina | 63 | 69 | 70 | 2.41 |
| North Carolina | 56 | 62 | 62 | 2.12 |
| Georgia | 57 | 66 | 65 | 2.12 |
| Kentucky | 49 | 63 | 102 | 2.48 |
| Arkansas | 48 | ..... | ..... | 3.67 |
| Louisiana | 19 | 69 | 102 | 4.24 |
| Maine, 1860–'70 | 60 | 78 | 99 | 5.05 |
| New Hampshire, 1860–'70 | 85 | 65 | 97 | 4.01 |
| Vermont, 1860–'70 | 78 | 64 | 119 | 5.06 |

From this table it will be seen that more than two-thirds of all children of school age attend school in Delaware, West Virginia, Missouri, Florida, and Texas; almost two-thirds in South Carolina, Mississippi, and Tennessee; and more than half in Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, and Alabama.

In Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, Kentucky, Missouri, Louisiana, and Texas the school year ranges from 100 up to 182 days, against 100 in New Hampshire now, and 99 in Maine and 97 in New Hampshire from 1860 to 1870.

The reports of school superintendents for 1884 show that in Florida 93 per cent. of all the children of school age, white and black, are enrolled; in Texas, 79; Delaware, 77; West Virginia, 73; Missouri, 68; South Carolina, 63; Tennessee, 61; Mississippi, 60.

In eight of the Southern States the average length of the school year ranges from 100 in Texas and West Virginia up to 182 in Maryland, whilst it falls below 75 days in only three.

In 1869 only 108,074 attended school in Virginia, whilst in 1884–'85 there were enrolled 303,343.

In Florida within the same period the number of scholars nearly doubled, the increase being from 38,315 to 62,327.

In Arkansas the enrollment increased from 112,233 in 1882–'83 to 153,216 in 1883–'84.

In Alabama the report of the State superintendent of schools shows that in four years the common schools have grown from 4,624 schools, with 177,428 pupils and a school fund of $392,904, to 5,595 schools, with 252,967 pupils and a school fund of $523,353.

In Arkansas the State superintendent reports that between 1883 and 1886 there has been an increase from 2,462 teachers, with 112,233 pupils and $479,471 expenditure, to 3,691 teachers, 175,935 pupils, and $866,892 expenditure.

In Georgia the State superintendent reports an increase in four years from 244,197 to 309,594 pupils, and of expenditure from $498,533 to $723,161.

In Florida the State superintendent reports the increase in school expenditure within four years from $133,260 to $400,000.

In the face of this record, evidencing beyond question the ability of the Southern people to educate the children, black and white, within their States, this bill is pressed to its passage.

Mr. President, I have loved the people of the South devotedly. I have shared their sorrows and gloried in their heroic fortitude under adverse fortune. They are now in presence of a great temptation, and if they yield to the tempter, if they barter away their history, traditions, principles, independence, and self-respect for this mess of Federal pottage, I shall turn away more in grief and shame than anger.

If this bill is passed, it will be by Southern votes; but there is one place of refuge still left for the Constitution.

The brave and honest man who is President of the Republic will prove false to the principles of his life, and of the great party which elected him, if he does not interpose his Executive veto in the path of this pernicious and undemocratic measure.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, obtained the floor.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to ask the Senator from Maryland if he will yield to a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business?

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. I will.

Mr. SPOONER rose.

Mr. HARRIS. Do I understand the Senator from Wisconsin to rise for a purpose?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senat or from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin if he desires it.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MILWAUKEE.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 154) for the erection of a public building at Milwaukee, Wis., may be considered at this time. I think it will not elicit any debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be informally laid aside in order that the Senate may consider the bill indicated by him. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and will be read at length.

The Secretary read the bill, which was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment in section 1, line 50, after the word "million" to insert "one hundred thousand," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, however, That the said Secretary may, in lieu of purchasing an entirely new site as aforesaid, purchase additional necessary ground adjoining the site of the present public building in said city, and cause to be erected thereon said new building; but in the event that said present site shall be so utilized, for said new building, the cost of said building, including said additional ground, shall not exceed one million one hundred thousand dollars.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HARRIS. I renew my motion.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRIS. If necessary, let the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

Mr. BLAIR. Let the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business has been laid before the Senate.

Mr. BLAIR. And laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And is pending, and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HARRIS. And I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 10, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

INSANE ASYLUM, AUBURN, N. Y.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Attorney-General, transmitting a letter from the superintendent of the State Asylum for Insane Criminals at Auburn, N. Y., and asking an appropriation to pay for removing from said asylum certain insane United States prisoners whose terms have expired; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

NORFOLK COUNTY FERRY COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of findings of fact, etc., in the case of the Norfolk County Ferry Committee vs. The United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

RALEIGH POINDEXTER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of findings of fact by the court in the case of Raleigh Poindexter vs. The United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the chairman of the joint commission for the completion of the Washington Monument, transmitting his annual report; which was referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WASHINGTON, for two days, on account of sickness.

To Mr. BOWDEN, for three days from the morning of the 10th, on account of important business.

To Mr. HOPKINS, for two days, on account of sickness.

RESIGNATION FROM A COMMITTEE.

Mr. BAKER, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BAKER, of Illinois. I rise for the purpose of announcing that I feel constrained to resign my position as a member of the Committee on Claims, and do so accordingly, adding, however, a sincere expression of my high appreciation of the personnel of that committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks to be excused from service on the Committee on Claims. If there be no objection, the request will be granted.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

CORRECTIONS.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I desire to correct the RECORD. On page 299 it appears that a bill introduced by me on the 6th, House bill No. 3017, in reference to the claim of the State of Florida, was referred to the War Claims Committee. It should have been referred to the Committee on Claims, and I think I made that indorsement upon the bill.

The SPEAKER. The reference of the bill will be corrected.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, on the 4th I introduced a number of petitions from fourth-class postmasters, asking for an increase of compensation. I find from the list of petitions printed in the RECORD that a number of errors appear in the names of the post-offices as well as in the names of the postmasters themselves, and I desire to have the necessary corrections made.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will send the corrections to the Official Reporters they will be inserted in the RECORD in their proper places.

ADDITIONAL DAY FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I desire unanimous consent to have a short petition printed in the RECORD in reference to the business of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the petition will be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Rules.

It is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

We, the undersigned residents and tax-payers of the District of Columbia, beg respectfully to represent:

That, in view of our entire dependence upon Congress for needful legislation, and of the great development of our population and values during the last decade, an additional day in each month ought to be set aside for the consideration of District affairs;

That we have entire confidence in the integrity, ability, and disinterestedness of our present Commissioners and in their knowledge of our needs, and we earnestly desire that their well-considered plans and efforts for the better security of the material interests of the District be encouraged and sustained; and

That we are entirely satisfied that these views are in full accord with those held by the large majority of our fellow-citizens:

Gardiner G. Hubbard, Thos. J. Fisher, W. S. Thompson, M. W. Beveridge, Alexander Graham Bell, E. Francis Riggs, Chas. C. Glover, George Bancroft, W. W. Corcoran, Anthony Hyde, E. F. Beale, John R. McLean, Sam'l Shellabarger, M. G. Emery, Crosby S. Noyes, B. H. Warder, Rob't C. Schenck, J. W. Thompson, Jno. A. J. Creswell, Dan'l B. Clarke, Sam'l Norment, Jno. T. Lenman, Stilson Hutchins, Brainard H. Warner, W. Laird, jr., H. M. Sweeny, G. T. Dunlop, W. H. Tenney & Sons, William A. Gordon, Enoch Totten, Walter S. Cox, W. E. Edmonston, M. Ashford, W. F. Mattingly, M. F. Morris, A. T. Britton, Jno. A. Baker, M.W. Galt, Bro. & Co., Hooe, Bro. & Co., R. Ross Perry, Nath'l Wilson, E. M. Gallaudet, Hallet Kilbourn, Johnson Brothers, E. Kurtz Johnson, L. G. Hine, Jas. G. Payne, Benjamin P. Snyder, C. B. Church, H. A. Griswold, W. W. Godding, C. M. Matthews, James C. Welling, Geo. Truesdell, L. B. Tuttle, Geo. W. Utermehle, Woodward & Lothrop, John F. Waggaman, John Hay, Fitch, Fox & Brown, Bell & Co., Peter F. Bacon, J. Henry Brooks, M. D., Wm. Ballantyne, W. M. Galt & Co., T. W. Smith, Geo. M. Oyster, S. Taylor Suit, Myron M. Parker, H. P. Waggaman, Geo. E. Lemon.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I desire to offer a resolution carrying out the objects of that petition.

The SPEAKER. A resolution of that nature will be in order on the call of States and Territories.

WHARTON'S "INTERNATIONAL LAW."

Mr. KELLEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 48) providing for the printing of a supplement to the Digest of International Law printed under the direction of joint resolution of July 28, 1886; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEE ON ELECTIONS.

Mr. CRISP, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Elections be authorized to have printed for the use of said committee such documents and papers as it may deem necessary in connection with subjects considered by said committee.

Resolved further, That said committee have leave to sit during the sessions of the House.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ASSIGNMENT OF COMMITTEE CLERKS.

Mr. SHAW submitted a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts; which was read, as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, having had under consideration the resolution referred to them by the House January 4, 1888, authorizing them to designate the committees which in the judgment of said committee should be allowed clerks under the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for the year ending June 30, 1888, limiting the number of clerks to be so apportioned to thirty-one, respectfully report the same back to the House with the following recommendations:

To the Committee on Elections, a clerk;
To the Committee on Banking and Currency, a clerk;
To the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, a clerk;
To the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, a clerk;
To the Committee on the Territories, a clerk;
To the Committee on Railways and Canals, a clerk;
To the Committee on Manufactures, a clerk;
To the Committee on Mines and Mining, a clerk, who shall also act as clerk to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River;
To the Committee on Pacific Railroads, a clerk;
To the Committee on Education, a clerk;
To the Committee on Labor, a clerk;
To the Committee on the Militia, a clerk, who shall also act as clerk to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department;
To the Committee on Patents, a clerk;
To the Committee on Invalid Pensions, two assistant clerks;
To the Committee on Pensions, a clerk;
To the Committee on Private Land Claims, a clerk;
To the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, a clerk, who shall also act as clerk to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice;
To the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, a clerk;
To the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, a clerk;
To the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department, a clerk;
To the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department, a clerk;
To the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings, a clerk, who shall also act as clerk to the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department;
To the Committee on Accounts, a clerk;
To the Committee on the Library, a clerk;
To the Committee on Printing, a clerk;
To the Committee on Enrolled Bills, a clerk;
To the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, a clerk;
To the Committee on the Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress, a clerk, who shall also act as clerk to the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics;
To the Committee on Indian Depredation Claims, a clerk; and To the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, a clerk.

And your committee would further recommend that there be allowed a clerk to the Committee on the Eleventh Census; and in view of the fact that the work of this committee will be arduous, critical, and virtually continuous, that this clerk be employed during the remainder of this Congress at a salary of $2,000 per annum, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, and therefore offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Eleventh Census be authorized to employ a clerk for the remainder of this Congress at a salary of $2,000 per year, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. SHAW. The Committee on Accounts, by the resolution of the House authorizing this action, was limited to the assignment of thirty-one clerks, and it found thirty-eight committees to be provided for. In the assignment they have done that which they believe will best promote the business of the House, and trust the report will commend itself to the judgment of the members on the floor. I now call the previous question.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask the gentleman from Maryland to withhold for the present the call for the previous question.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. SHAW] consent to allow amendments to be offered?

Mr. SHAW. I scarcely see how it is possible for any logic, even with all the sophistry of which it is capable, to provide thirty-eight committees each with a clerk when there are only thirty-one clerks to be assigned.

Mr. LANHAM. Still it might be proper to make some amendments to the report.

Mr. HOOKER. If the gentleman from Maryland will permit, I desire to offer an amendment to this effect, that that portion of the report which attaches to the clerk to the Mining Committee other duties be stricken out, and that a clerk be given to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River.

I therefore ask the gentleman to withdraw the call for the previous question, which endeavors to force through the whole of the proposition without an opportunity being given to consider any amendment. If the gentleman will not agree to that, I hope the House will vote down the call for the previous question. The House must have control of these matters in some way or other, unless the committee is to be absolute and give the House no opportunity for amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. SHAW] demands the previous question on the adoption of the report.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes 128.

Mr. SHAW. I call for the yeas and nays.

For ordering the yeas and nays there were 34 votes in the affirmative—not one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. SHAW. Count the other side.

The negative vote was counted, and there were noes 117.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the whole vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BAKER, of Illinois. I ask that the report of the committee may be again read, so that the House may understand it.

The Clerk read the report.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] proposes to provide a separate clerk for each of the five committees not included in the report of the Committee on Accounts. Now I am sure that the House desires to adopt the report, and intends no reflection whatever upon the committee, and therefore I suggest that, by unanimous consent, the call of the roll be dispensed with and the House be allowed to vote directly on the proposition of the gentleman from Mississippi, and decide as to whether or not they will allow these five additional clerks.

Mr. BLOUNT. On that single proposition alone?

Mr. SHAW. I am perfectly willing that the sense of the House shall be taken on that question.

Mr. REED. I should think it much better that the gentleman should withdraw the call for the yeas and nays, and have the discussion go on.

The SPEAKER. It requires unanimous consent now to change the regular order. The yeas and nays have been ordered upon the demand for the previous question. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] suggests that unanimous consent be given to dispense with the call of the yeas and nays, and take a vote upon the proposition of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER]. Is there objection?

Mr. REED. There is no objection to dropping the call for the yeas and nays; but the other proposition, it seems to me, is one that ought not to be accepted, for I presume the object of the gentleman on the other side in objecting to the report of the Committee on Accounts was to have this subject discussed, and the House has voted very decidedly in favor of the discussion of the proposition involved. I hope gentlemen will not shrink from the discussion.

The SPEAKER. The request of the gentleman from Missouri is objected to, and the Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 83, nays 189, not voting 51; as follows:

YEAS—83.

During the roll-call the following proceedings took place:

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to ask if it is not perfectly competent to refer this matter, including the amendment of my friend from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER,] to the Committee on Accounts for a further report.

The SPEAKER. Of course the House has at all times control over any question as to the number of its clerks.

The following-named members were announced as paired:

Mr. FORAN with Mr. BUTTERWORTH.

Mr. BURNES with Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa.

Mr. CLEMENTS with Mr. MCCOMAS.

Mr. SAYERS with Mr. CANNON.

Mr. RANDALL with Mr. RYAN.

Mr. CAMPBELL with Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICE with Mr. MAFFETT.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Alabama, with Mr. HOPKINS, of New York.

The following were announced as paired for this day:

Mr. FORNEY with Mr. LONG.

Mr. GAY with Mr. ARNOLD.

Mr. SPINOLA with Mr. KEAN.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina, with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.

Mr. ROWLAND with Mr. BOUTELLE.

Mr. FORD with Mr. PARKER.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

So the demand for the previous question was not agreed to.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I have reduced to writing the proposition which I make to amend the report of the Committee on Accounts, and I now send it to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

That so much of the report of the committee as provides that the same clerk shall act for two committees be stricken out, and that a separate clerk be allowed for each one of the Committees on Expenditures in the State Department, the Navy Department, and the Department of Justice, and for the Committees on Levees of the Mississippi River, and on Ventilation and Acoustics; and that clerks whose pay is not provided for by law shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House until the 1st day of July, 1888, at the rate of $6 per day, as heretofore.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word upon this proposed amendment to the report of the committee; and probably what should be said upon this subject might be embraced in the single declaration that if there is any subject of sufficient dignity and importance in the view either of the House itself, or of the country whose interests it cares for, as to justify the appointment of a committee, the work of that committee ought to be of sufficient moment to demand the appointment of a clerk.

My amendment provides simply that a clerk be provided for each of the committees designated in the report, instead of having in several cases clerks with double duty to perform, as is now provided. I might speak of one of these committees, which is of very great and growing importance; I allude to that which has charge of the improvement of the Mississippi River. This is an important committee, and grows more and more so every year, as appropriations become more and more necessary for improving the navigation of that great river and its main tributaries.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this report ought to provide a clerk for each of the committees designated, the effect of my proposition being to provide clerks for the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department, the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River, and the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics. The whole increase in expenditure will be to the extent simply of providing a clerk for each of these committees. The Committee on Accounts, as I understand, is not provided for and does not particularly desire to be; hence that committee is not embraced in the proposition.

I make no allusion to the Committee on the Census, because that has been provided for very properly by the report of the committee, which proposes the appointment of an annual clerk for the Committee on the Census. The necessity of such a clerk must be apparent to any one who has acted heretofore, as I have, upon that committee; for I had the honor in a former Congress to take a part in that service with the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX], who with such distinguished ability acted as chairman of the committee which made provision for the taking and publication of the census of 1880. My amendment does not affect in the least the provision of the report on that subject.

Now, sir, if no one desires to speak on this subject, I will imitate the example of the gentleman who presented this report, and will call for the previous question.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman yield to me for two minutes?

Mr. BURROWS. I would like to say a few words.

Mr. HOOKER. I will first yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, if the House is not prepared to adopt the proposition of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER], that every committee be provided with a clerk, nevertheless the report of the Committee on Accounts ought to be amended by striking out that portion which provides that the clerk of one committee shall render service as clerk for another committee. Such provision is utterly useless; no practical advantage has ever been found to result from it, and the only reason for inserting it in the report is to make it appear that in some way provision is made for the clerical work of all the committees.

The session committee clerks authorized by law number, I believe, thirty-one, whereas the number of committees to be provided in some way with clerical assistance is, I think, thirty-seven.

A MEMBER. Thirty-eight.

Mr. ADAMS. The Committee on Accounts has undertaken to distribute these thirty-one clerks among thirty-eight committees. The proper way of performing this particular task would have been for them to say which of these committees are entitled to clerks, and there have left the matter, leaving it to the House to provide for the other committees out of the contingent fund, or else not to provide for them at all; for every one who is familiar with committee business will see that a clerk appointed by the chairman of one committee can not be, and I believe experience has shown never has been, of the slightest possible practical use to any other committee.

Hence, at the proper time I would like to call for a division of the question, in order that, if the House should decide to vote down the proposition of the gentleman from Mississippi—and I shall vote with him in support of it—we may nevertheless strike from the report of the committee the useless and absurd provision that a clerk of one committee shall appear to serve also as the clerk of another committee.

Mr. LANHAM. I desire to inquire as to the effect of the demand made by the gentleman from Mississippi for the previous question, as I have an amendment which I desire to offer to the report of the committee.

Mr. HOOKER. I take it for granted, if the Speaker please, that the previous question if now ordered would operate upon the report of the committee and the amendment which I have proposed. Of course, the previous question can not operate upon anything which, when it is called, is not before the House; and up to this time, as I understand, there is no amendment pending except that which I have offered.

Mr. LANHAM. I desire to offer an amendment to the report of the committee.

Mr. HOOKER. I am now ready to yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS]. How much time does he desire?

Mr. BURROWS. Five minutes.

Mr. HOOKER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, the effect of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi is to enlarge the number of clerks as contemplated by the report; and it provides specifically that a clerk be assigned to each of the committees on expenditures in the various Departments. I had supposed that the appointment of a clerk to any committee was based upon the assumption that the committee would have something to do. If the object of appointing a committee clerk is simply to provide the chairman of the committee with some one to attend to his private correspondence, this is an excellent device for that purpose.

We have no better way of judging of the probable services of these various committees in the future than by referring to the experience of the past. One of the committees to which the gentleman from Mississippi asks that a clerk be assigned is the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department. This committee existed in the last Congress, and I find that in the first session of that Congress it made no report, and in the second session made the same number. The Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, consisting of seven members, made in the first session of the last Congress one report, and in the second session none. Yet this committee is to be provided with a clerk. The Committee on Expenditures in the War Department made, during the first session of the last Congress, two trifling reports, and during the second session none. From the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department there were in the first session of the last Congress two reports, and in the second session none. From the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department in the first session there was no report made whatever, nor was any report made in the second session. From the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department there was no report in the first session and no report in the second session. I believe, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, there was an investigation in the first session, but there was no report made in the second session. The Committee on Expenditures of Public Buildings made no report whatever. So I may say in regard to other committees.

Now, it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, it is a profligate expenditure of public money. These committees, in the main, have no necessity for a clerk, and I apprehend the clerk is chiefly for the purpose of transacting the business of the chairman of the committee. If a portion of the members of the House are to be assigned clerks under the guise of clerks to committees, which committees have nothing to do, why not let a clerk be appointed for each member of the House, as a clerk is provided for each member in the Senate? I submit this is not a fair way to dispose of the surplus. [Laughter.]

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman from Michigan permit me to ask him a question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. PERKINS. I hope the gentleman from Mississippi will permit me to move an amendment at this time.

Mr. HOOKER. I have agreed to yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

Mr. PERKINS. I hope there will be no objection to having my amendment read.

Mr. HOOKER. Not now.

Mr. LANHAM. I send up to the Clerk's desk to be read an amendment which I desire to offer at this time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Claims be authorized, during this session only, until further order of the House, to employ an assistant clerk, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, at the rate of $6 per day.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Texas for debate or for the purpose of having the amendment offered?

Mr. HOOKER. I have yielded to the gentleman from Texas for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman mean to have the amendment offered?

Mr. HOOKER. Whilst I think the Committee on Claims ought to have an assistant clerk, I am satisfied that if I yield for the purpose of allowing the gentleman to offer this amendment I will be compelled to yield to a half-dozen others who have similar amendments to submit.

Mr. PERKINS. I hope there will be no objection to permit me to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HOOKER. I can not yield to the gentleman from Texas to offer his amendment, nor can I yield for any other amendment to be offered.

Mr. LANHAM. I hope the gentleman from Mississippi will hear me for one moment.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, was received from the President, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

CLERKS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. LANHAM. The gentleman from Mississippi has yielded to me for five minutes, and, Mr. Speaker, it is only necessary to say in support of the amendment I have offered that it has been usual for several years to provide an assistant clerk for the Committee on Claims. That is one of the hardest working committees in this House, as all members will attest who have served on it.

The amendment I have offered is identical in language with the resolution reported from the Committee on Accounts in the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress. No man who has ever served on that committee will deny the justice of giving that committee a clerk and an assistant clerk. It needs not only a clerk, but an assistant clerk, because bills are pouring upon it every day. Seventeen hundred bills were referred to it at the last session of Congress. We need the service of an assistant clerk, and I hope it will be granted.

I desire to say a word, Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from Michigan——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield the floor for the purpose of allowing this amendment?

Mr. HOOKER. No; I do not. I can not yield to any amendment, but will call the previous question before sitting down.

Mr. LANHAM. I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. HOOKER. There will be no difficulty on the part of the gentleman from Texas in passing that proposition after my proposition has been disposed of; but if I yield to him now to offer it as an amendment I will have to yield to everybody else on the floor who has a similar amendment to present.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman consent to this being offered?

Mr. HOOKER. No; I can not now.

Mr. LANHAM. Will he consent to its being referred to the Committee on Accounts?

Mr. HOOKER. I have no objection to the gentleman offering it whenever he pleases, but I prefer my own proposition to be voted on now without amendment.

Let me say a word in answer to what has been said by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS]. I differ with him as to the importance of these committees for which clerks have been asked. Several years ago I served on the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, and I do not remember to have ever performed any service more laborious or more important than that of the committee on which I had the honor to serve as chairman of the subcommittee. Each one of these Committees on the Expenditures in the State Department, on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, and on Expenditures in the Interior Department, if they perform the duties imposed upon them by their creation and the appointment of members to serve upon them, in obtaining the information needed for the action of the House, will have plenty to do, and in the proper discharge of their duties they ought to have the assistance of clerks to assist them, and not impose the whole work upon the members, who already have as much as they can possibly attend to.

Now, the gentleman from Michigan asked, why not appoint a clerk for each member, as the Senate has provided a clerk for each Senator? Let me say to him that each clerk provided for one of these committees is not only for the service of the chairman of the committee but is amenable to the orders and directions of every other member of the committee just as much as he is to the chairman of the committee. He is the clerk of the committee to perform the functions attached to that position, and there is not one of the committee who is not entitled to his services as much as the chairman. As I have already stated, if it was important enough to designate these committees, their duties are of sufficient importance to require action on the part of members who have been appointed upon them.

I now call the previous question on the amendment I have offered to the report of the committee.

Mr. PERKINS. Is it in order for me now to offer a substitute?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The Chair understands the previous question to be called by the gentleman from Mississippi on the amendment only.

Mr. HOOKER. No, I call the previous question on the whole subject—upon my amendment and upon the report of the committee.

Mr. PERKINS. I would like, with the permission of the gentleman from Mississippi, to offer a substitute for his proposition.

Mr. HOOKER. The gentleman can offer his proposition separately and let it stand upon its own merits. I do not want to embarrass this amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi demands the previous question.

Mr. REED. That cuts off all other amendments?

The SPEAKER. If the previous question is ordered it does.

Mr. REED. It is evident from the language of the gentleman from Mississippi that he does not so understand it, because he says the gentleman from Kansas may be allowed to offer his substitute.

Mr. HOOKER. I say that he can offer his proposition on its own merits at another time.

Mr. REED. Oh, at some other time! Not now?

Mr. HOOKER. No, sir; not now.

Mr. REED. Well, will the gentleman from Mississippi tell me how many reports the Committee on Levees of the Mississippi River made in the last Congress?

Mr. HOOKER. I do not know, sir; I know that they might make a great many if they had clerical assistance.

I call the previous question.

Mr. REED. I will tell the gentleman from Mississippi they made one report.

Mr. HOOKER. That may be. I have no doubt the subject is important enough to induce a number of reports.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question being taken on ordering the previous question, there were—ayes 67, noes 123.

So the previous question was not ordered.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I now offer the amendment I sent to the desk a few moments ago as an amendment to the report of the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. To come in after the report of the committee?

Mr. LANHAM. I offer it independently of the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi.

The SPEAKER. But that amendment is pending, and until it is disposed of no other amendment is in order, except as an amendment to that.

Mr. LANHAM. Then I offer it as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi.

The SPEAKER. That is in order, and it will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Claims be authorized during this session only, until further ordered by the House, to employ an assistant clerk, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, at the rate of $6 per day.

Mr. PERKINS. I offer the following substitute, if in order.

The SPEAKER. A substitute for what?

Mr. PERKINS. For the pending proposition.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman offer it as a substitute for the proposition of the gentleman from Mississippi as proposed to be amended by the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, sir; as a substitute for both propositions.

The SPEAKER. That is in order, and it will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That each member of this House, not the chairman of a committee given a clerk herein, shall be given a clerk during the sessions of Congress, to be paid for from the House contingent fund, at the rate of $100 per month.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOOKER. The proposition which has been submitted by myself as an amendment to the report of the Committee on Accounts, refers to a number of clerks to be designated for specific duties to the committees of the House. The amendment of the gentleman from Texas proposes an amendment to mine, giving an assistant clerk to the Committee on Claims. These two amendments, Mr. Speaker, are in accordance with the subject-matter of the report. That report refers to clerks for committees of the House as they are now constituted. But the proposition of the gentleman on the other side of the Chamber, as I understand it, is not to give a clerk or additional clerk to committees of the House, but to give each member of the House a clerk at a fixed compensation designated in his amendment. I submit, sir, that that is not properly a substitute; that it is not germane, and is not pertinent either to the subject-matter of the report of the committee, to my amendment, or to that of the gentleman from Texas.

It is not the purpose of the Committee on Accounts, nor was it their function, to report upon the question of what clerical assistance should be given to the individual members; but they refer specifically to clerks for committees. My amendment only proposes to increase the number of clerks by adding five, and the gentleman from Texas by his amendment proposes a further addition of one clerk.

I therefore submit that the proposition from the other side is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Kansas on the point of order.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the point of order made by the gentleman from Mississippi, I would suggest that, as I understand the question, this is a report from the Committee on Accounts—the committee which has jurisdiction of this subject; and, as a substitute for the pending amendments offered to that report, I have offered the proposition which has been read, which not only enlarges the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi, but meets what I believe is a "long-felt want" in this House. [Laughter.] The propriety of the amendment has been acknowledged both publicly and privately by almost all of the members except when they happen to be required to cast their votes "yea" or "nay" upon this floor. [Laughter.] Then for some cause best known to themselves they do not seem inclined to put themselves on the record as in personal conversation.

In further answer it appears to me that this is germane to the pending proposition. If the proposition is adopted what is its effect? The gentleman from Mississippi as chairman of a committee is provided for already by the report. As chairman of a committee which has no work, but as a member of the House, which has much work, he is already provided for; while other members of the House who have much work to do, but are not chairmen of committees, are provided for by the substitute. This applies to those members of the House who are not given clerks by the report of the committee; and as a substitute, therefore, it seems manifestly to be germane to the report and in order. If the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi is in order it seems to me my substitute must also be in order, because it enlarges the scope of his amendment.

The SPEAKER. The amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi relates to clerks of committees only.

Mr. REED. The Speaker will notice that this report contains the provision for a special clerk for the Committee on the Census, with special pay and with a special term of service. That takes the report out of the ordinary category of reports for the assignment of clerks already provided by law. No objection has been made to that, and it is to that report that the amendment is offered; and it seems to me that an amendment, like that of the gentleman from Kansas, is germane to such a report as that; for it provides for the same class of cases that are intended in the provision as to Census Committee and such cases as that of the gentleman from Mississippi. In other words, it gives to us outright and directly what some gentlemen are desirous—and there is no objection to their desire—of having under the general forms which have hitherto existed; and I am sure the House ought to be allowed to vote on the proposition.

Mr. SHAW. I desire to say in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] that the resolution in regard to the Census Committee, although not exactly in pursuance of the resolution under which the committee was authorized by the House to act in providing a clerk, provided nevertheless a clerk for a committee, and not a clerk for an individual member of the House.

Mr. REED. Yet that was the object.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to say in reply to the gentleman from Maine that it appears to me he very much misunderstands the proposition of his friend from Kansas. The proposition of that gentleman is a substitute for the amendment offered by myself and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas, and not an amendment to the report of the committee.

Therefore the argument of the gentleman from Maine that the Committee on Accounts have provided in this report that the Census Committee shall have a clerk at a fixed salary during this Congress is no argument that the proposition of the gentleman from Kansas is in order.

That proposition is offered as a substitute for the two amendments; and even if it were offered as a substitute for the report itself, the proposition of the gentleman from Maine would not be correct; for it is in the power of that committee to report the assignment of a clerk to a committee. As they did for all the committees, so they did for the Committee on the Census, which is a committee raised at this time for the purpose of taking charge of the mode and method of taking the next census of the United States.

Therefore it seems to me the argument of the gentleman from Maine is not maintainable, and the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas is not germane to the subject-matter before the House, the report of the committee, or the amendment, which I had the honor to offer, or the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The SPEAKER. The rule of the House provides that no proposition on a subject-matter under consideration shall be admitted under color of an amendment; in other words, that every amendment offered to a pending proposition must be germane to that proposition. The report now before the House relates entirely to the assignment of clerks to committees of the House, while the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas proposes to assign a clerk to each member. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken and that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. McRAE. I desire to offer what I send to the desk as a substitute for the report of the committee and all pending amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That each committee of the House not allowed an annual clerk by law is hereby allowed a session clerk at $100 per month, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. McRAE. It is a well-known fact that committees to some extent at least have heretofore been furnished clerks who have but little work for them. It looks hard to discriminate and allow some clerks and others none, and at the same time I am opposed to spending as much money as we do for such clerks. The money appropriated, if properly distributed on the basis of the work to be performed, would more than furnish every committee with a clerk. Let us reduce the salary to $100 per month. For that sum you can get men competent to discharge all the duties that are incumbent upon these committee session clerks; men equally as competent as those who served the last Congress. Do this and you will treat all alike and besides save nearly $20,000 of the amount appropriated for this purpose. Therefore I hope if the House allows the employment of clerks whose principal duty is to serve the favored few who happen to be named first on the committees, that it will do so at as little cost as possible. I think we can get competent young men for $100 per month. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY.]

Mr. DOCKERY. I sincerely hope the proposition of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] will not be adopted. Thirty-one session clerks are now authorized by law, the law of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. This proposition seeks to take the money for the payment of these clerks out of the contingent fund, when Congress has heretofore and now authorized these clerks to be paid out of the general fund. The effect of this amendment, if adopted, will be to exhaust the contingent fund of the House and leave without use the appropriation heretofore made for the payment of the thirty-one session clerks.

Mr. HOOKER rose.

Mr. McRAE. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman from Arkansas allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. McRAE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOOKER. Does your amendment affect the clerk provided for the Committee on the Census?

Mr. McRAE. It is not so intended.

Mr. HOOKER. Then let it be so expressed.

Mr. McRAE. I intended that my resolution should be a substitute for all of the report of the committee except the resolution which refers to the Committee on the Eleventh Census. That I adopt and make a part of mine.

Mr. OATES. Why should a clerk to a committee of the House be paid less than a clerk to a committee of the Senate?

Mr. McRAE. Simply because we should be more economical than the Senate is.

Mr. LANHAM. Where there is an annual clerk provided for, does your resolution exclude assistant clerks?

Mr. McRAE. No, sir; it does not affect them.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], I want to say this: If the appropriation in the act of March 3, 1887, for thirty-one annual clerks, without naming them, is not expended, the Government will have lost nothing. We are not compelled to employ them. What I propose is to use a less amount of money and provide a greater number of clerks, and service for more committees. It can be done, and it ought to be done.

Now, if any gentleman desires to discuss the substitute, I will yield to him for that purpose. Otherwise, I shall call for the previous question.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to offer a substitute for the pending amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] has offered a substitute for the entire report of the committee, and the pending amendment. No further amendments can now be offered except an amendment to the substitute of the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. PERKINS. Then I will offer mine as an amendment to his substitute.

Mr. McRAE. Before I yield for the amendment to be offered, I would like to hear it read.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, how does the gentleman from Arkansas get control of this matter?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas has the floor for one hour, under the rules. At the termination of that time, if the previous question is not ordered, the floor will be open to any member who can take it.

The amendment proposed to be offered by Mr. PERKINS was read, as follows:

Resolved, That each member of every committee shall be entitled to a clerk during the session of Congress, who shall receive a monthly salary of $100, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House: Provided, That only one clerk shall be allowed to each member.

[Laughter.]

The SPEAKER Does the gentleman from Arkansas yield the floor to have this amendment offered?

Mr. McRAE. I do not.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] is not before the House?

The SPEAKER. It is not. It has not been offered.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have my substitute modified so as to embody that portion of the report of the Committee on Accounts which provides for a clerk for the Committee on the Eleventh Census. Now, if no other gentleman desires to discuss the substitute, I will call for the previous question.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask to have the substitute reported.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] refuses to permit my amendment to be offered?

The SPEAKER. He declines to yield for that purpose.

The Clerk again read the substitute offered by Mr. McRAE.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. McRAE. The substitute being modified so as to embrace that portion of the report of the Committee on Accounts providing a clerk for the Committee on the Eleventh Census, I demand the previous question upon its adoption.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. McRAE. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand that the appropriation bill, which is now the law, provides for twenty-five clerks for committees at $6 per day during the session, making an aggregate of $31,950.

A MEMBER. Does it name the committees?

Mr. SPRINGER. It does not name the committees, but it enumerates the clerks that are allowed to be appointed and fixes their rate of compensation.

Mr. McRAE. We are not compelled to employ the thirty-one. We can employ more or less of them.

Mr. SPRINGER. It seems to me that twenty-five of the clerks that we employ will, under the law, be entitled to $6 a day.

Mr. McRAE. I think not. If the gentleman's position is correct, what is the use of what we are doing here this morning?

Mr. SPRINGER. Twenty-five of the clerks are provided for in the appropriation bill, and the amount of compensation they are to receive is fixed. Now, it seems to me that for twenty-five clerks, in addition to the annual clerks, Congress has already fixed the per diem compensation, but as to any others in addition to the twenty-five, their compensation may be fixed at any sum which the House may deem just, to be paid out of the contingent fund.

Mr. McRAE. If the position of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is correct, what will these clerks receive after the 1st of July, of the present year? The appropriation bill expires at that time.

Mr. SPRINGER. They will receive nothing after the appropriation expires.

Mr. McRAE. Then let us fix their compensation now. You are seeking to employ these clerks for the Fiftieth Congress. Let them understand when they go into the places exactly what they are to receive and how long they are to remain. One hundred dollars a month is enough for the work to be performed, and I hope the compensation will be fixed at that. The resolution of February 17, 1882, only fixes the time when the pay begins and does not fix the amount.

Mr. SPRINGER. But I understand that the compensation of twenty-five of them is fixed by law until the 30th of June next.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I wish to ask the gentleman from Arkansas whether the effect of the adoption of his substitute would not be to give all these clerks to the District of Columbia, for the reason that clerks who might be appointed from the States or from other sections of the country could not afford to come here for $100 a month?

Mr. McRAE. I will undertake to furnish all the clerks that are wanted out of the gentleman's own district for $100 a month, or out of any other district. [Laughter.] I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas moves the previous question upon the report and all pending amendments.

Mr. SHAW. I hope the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] will permit me to say a few words.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Committee on Accounts [Mr. SHAW] desires to be heard briefly on this subject; and I yield to him such time as he may desire. Will five minutes be sufficient?

Mr. SHAW. I do not desire more than that time.

Mr. McRAE. I yield to the gentleman for not exceeding five minutes.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I trust that the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] will not prevail. Many of these committees—in fact most of them—have important duties to discharge and they require clerks of such an order of talent as will command in other positions better pay than the gentleman proposes to allow. I am quite sure, therefore, that the efficiency of the committees would be very greatly interfered with were this amendment adopted. I trust it will be voted down.

Mr. McRAE. I believe the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] wishes me to yield to him. Will five minutes be sufficient?

Mr. BURROWS. I desire the gentleman to yield for the purpose of allowing me to offer an amendment.

Mr. McRAE. If the gentleman will indicate his amendment, I will determine whether I can yield.

Mr. BURROWS. I wish to offer an amendment to append to the proposition this provision—that the proposition shall not apply to the eight committees on expenditures in the various Departments. Is there objection to that?

Mr. McRAE. I could not agree to that, because I understand that some of these committees need clerks as badly as some others that have had them. If the gentleman means economy then he should vote for my substitute. I renew the call for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 50, noes 92.

Several MEMBERS. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. As no quorum has voted, tellers will be ordered.

Mr. McRAE. In order to save time, I call for the yeas and nays on ordering the previous question.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 15 voting in favor thereof.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS].

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 93, noes 116.

So the previous question was not ordered.

Mr. PERKINS addressed the Chair.

Mr. MILLS. As the call for the previous question has not been sustained, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. REED. I submit that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] is entitled to the floor by parliamentary usage.

Mr. PERKINS. I addressed the Chair, and endeavored to get recognition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to offer as an amendment to the substitute of the gentleman from Arkansas the provision which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That each member of every committee shall be entitled to a clerk during the session of Congress, who shall receive a monthly salary of $100, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House: Provided, That only one clerk shall be allowed to each member.

Mr. MILLS. I make the point of order that this proposition is not germane to the pending question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that this amendment is not germane to the proposition before the House.

Mr. PERKINS. I think the gentleman from Texas did not observe the phraseology of my motion, to which I call the attention of the Speaker. My proposition relates to the committee.

Mr. MILLS. It proposes the employment of a clerk for each member of a committee, which of course includes every member of the House.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kansas desire to be heard further on the point of order?

Mr. PERKINS. I have said all that I wish to say on that point.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has some doubt as to the admissibility of the amendment, but feels disposed to let the House vote upon it.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM].

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a point of order. I submit that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas is not in order, not being germane to the subject-matter under consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has just stated that, although he entertains some doubt as to the admissibility of the amendment under the rules, he will allow the House to vote upon it, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM].

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I remember that when in the last Congress a resolution was offered and voted upon, granting to each member of Congress a clerk, but three of all the chairmen of committees of the House that were provided with clerks voted in favor of that proposition, notwithstanding the fact that a number of the committees, as has been shown this morning, although they had clerks, had practically no business to perform, for I happened to be a member of one committee that had but one meeting besides the one called for the purpose of organizing the committee; yet that committee had a clerk, and a number of these committees are in the same position. When that vote was taken those gentlemen who were chairmen of these committees had their clerks; yet, upon the proposition to allow each individual member a clerk, all these chairmen, except three, as I have stated, voted against doing unto others as they would have others do unto them. Therefore I think it proper that we should vote on this proposition now, before these gentlemen, who are chairmen of committees, obtain their share of the "pork." While they are "out in the cold" the chances are that they will be more willing to do justice to their fellow-members on this proposition.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield for a few moments to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE].

Mr. STRUBLE. Mr. Speaker, as is known to members of the last Congress, I advocated in that Congress the justice of the proposition that the members of that House should each be allowed a clerk, so as to better enable them to discharge the responsible duties imposed upon them. Though I but repeat what has been said over and over again, the statement is worth repetition, that no member of this House can discharge all the burdensome clerical work connected with the performance of his official duties, and at the same time have opportunity for the examination of the great public questions which are necessarily thrust upon him, and which he should have time intelligently to examine.

It is of more importance to this country that their legislators should have time and opportunity for a proper, full, and complete examination of these great public questions coming before them than it is whether or not we shall expend a few dollars more this year and during this Congress than during a preceding year and at another Congress.

I am in favor of this proposition to grant a clerk at a proper compensation, to be paid during each session only, to every member of this Congress, and not only to the members of this, but of future Congresses, and I am prepared to go before my people and defend my position. In the interest of the people we represent, who deserve and demand our best and most faithful service, let us have the manhood to pass this motion.

Mr. PERKINS. If it is the desire of the gentleman from Texas, I will renew the demand for the previous question; or if any gentleman desires to speak in opposition to the amendment I will now yield the floor to him for that purpose.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I should like to be heard.

Mr. PERKINS. For how long?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Five minutes.

Mr. PERKINS. I will yield to the gentleman for that time.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I agree with all that has been said as to the necessity for the employment of a clerk for each Representative of the people in this House. I am compelled, however, to vote against this proposition. We were elected under a law fixing the compensation of Representatives in Congress at $5,000 per annum, to which are added certain emoluments in the shape of mileage and allowance for stationery. That was at least in morals a contract between each Representative and his constituents that he would serve the ensuing term for that measure of compensation.

Still, I object to it for the further reason that there is nothing to intervene between the Treasury and the Representatives of the people, except an election, after a measure has been passed that seeks to take money from the Treasury. The power of this House to appropriate money for the pay of its own members is without limit as to time. Congress may not only increase the measure of its compensation, but may to some extent make it retroactive. If we may do that as to the session in which we now serve, there is nothing to prevent our allowing additional compensation to members for terms which have already expired. If, therefore, we may, without limit—for I believe the Constitution imposes none except that the appropriation shall be for public purposes—if, I say, we may therefore appropriate without limit, it seems to me when we have increased the salary or emoluments of office it ought not to take effect until an election intervenes between the passage of the law and the time when it is to be operative. In that way, and in that way only, can the people have an opportunity to pass upon such a measure and save the Treasury.

If we increase our salary, say, to $10,000, $15,000, or $25,000 each—although we have been elected upon a measure of compensation fixed at a lesser sum than this enormous amount—this raid, if you please, on the Treasury can only be prevented by allowing the people between this and the time when the law is to take effect to send Representatives here who will repeal the law.

As I have said before on this floor and repeat now, I will never vote to increase my compensation or the compensation of Representatives in Congress, either directly or indirectly, unless the measure is by express stipulation only to take effect in another Congress to be sent here by the people.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HERBERT. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for five minutes.

Mr. PERKINS. I will yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] five minutes, and when he has concluded, to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] for five minutes.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask that the pending resolution be reported.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me the House is not paying the attention to this matter which its importance demands. The effect of it will be to add about three hundred clerks, three hundred office-holders, to the number now in existence. If gentlemen will look a little, as they ought to do, at the situation, I think they will understand why certain gentlemen persist in their endeavor to force the proposition on the House at this time, just before a Presidential election. Are we, whom the country holds responsible for the conduct of this House, as the majority party, willing to take the responsibility now of indirectly increasing, as the gentleman from Indiana has said, our own compensation by adding these three hundred additional office-holders to the existing clerical force? This is the single question to which I desire to call the attention of the House, and I most earnestly hope we will not permit it to be done. It matters not who makes the motion, or what party votes it upon us, the majority will be held responsible for this additional three hundred office-holders if this resolution shall be adopted.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield now to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, the proposition to give to each member of the House a clerk is by no means a new one. For several Congresses preceding this that proposition has come up in some shape or other before the House of Representatives, and it has been almost unanimously voted down. It has always been condemned by every Democratic House that has been assembled since the origination of the proposition. It is essentially a Senate measure, decried by the several Democratic Houses that preceded this from the date of its first presentation in the House to the present time. It is a question that has occasioned struggles between the two Houses and has at times threatened an extra session. Conference committees of the two Houses have met and disagreed time and again because of it, and the unanimous conclusion reached by the Democrats in the House has invariably been against the adoption of such a measure.

It has never reached the House before in its present shape, and now it comes after such an unfortunate chain of circumstances as puts the control of the measure practically in the hands of the other side of the House.

The question with which we are now confronted, therefore, is, shall we submit to the situation? Is it not possible for the gentlemen who control this side of the House and who control the House itself, but who have temporarily lost control of this measure, to resume that authority vested in them by recommitting this report to the committee from which it originated, coupled with the other propositions which have been offered as amendments to it on the floor of the House?

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that, by a mistake the House has hitherto made, this measure is not now in such a shape that the House can wisely act upon it. I do not undertake to say that the report of the Committee on Accounts is the exact report that should be adopted; I do not mean to say that the measure presented by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] is the exact thing that should be passed, or that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] is right. But there has been a development of the opinions and sentiments of this side of the House, there has been an expression of its wants and wishes; and I trust that in the light of that development the whole matter will be recommitted to the Committee on Accounts in order that it may consider and make such report as may be reached in the light of surrounding circumstances after full consideration of the facts.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] has well stated the matter, when he says that this is but another proposition to create three hundred and twenty-five additional officers, less the clerks of the present committees of the House. That is just what it means, neither more nor less, and it is a proposition that has been repudiated by every Democratic House that has been in session, as I have said, since the origination of the measure.

Now, sir, this House is under the control of the Democratic party. That party is responsible for whatever shall emanate from it. It makes no difference whether the legislation adopted here shall be reached by a majority of that party, or by the great bulk of the other side and a small faction of this side. This side, under any circumstances, is responsible to the country, and the country will hold it responsible for whatever is done or left undone. I trust, sir, that in this measure, as in all other measures that are presented here, we, facing the responsibility, as we should, will act together as friends, political friends for political purposes, in the interests of this great country.

This proposition is but the beginning. Division here upon this means division at other points. We have the care of the public treasury, and if extravagance is to commence to-day, or has already commenced, and if it is to be continued, the responsibility for this negligence must rest on this side of the House, and the country will undoubtedly hold it responsible.

Mr. PERKINS. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has forty minutes remaining.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. STOCKDALE].

Mr. STOCKDALE. Mr. Speaker, there is great force probably in the expressions used by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] and repeated by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], but as far as the question of forcing a measure upon this House by the other side or by this side on the threshold of a Presidential election is concerned, I do not think there is anything in that whatever. If the measure be right in itself, we are perfectly willing to support it and go into any election upon that issue. If the measure in itself be wrong, we should vote it down, if there never was to be a Presidential election at all.

Now, then, if the members of this House really need a clerk, if their duties to their constituents demand that they shall have a clerk to assist them in the minor operations of their official duties, why I should be perfectly willing to go before my constituents and say so, and tell them the reason that I voted for such a resolution. It would be voting for a resolution in their interest, not in our own, in order that they might have the advantage of all the time of their representatives and the assistance of a clerk. If the members, therefore, have any necessity for a clerk to assist them in the discharge of their public duties, duties that they owe to their constituents, they should have a clerk.

I believe the duties of this House are as arduous as the duties imposed by the Senate upon its members. But, Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to voting upon this resolution at the present time; not for any reason that I fear a vote on any question in the face of a Presidential election, but I do not believe the subject has been sufficiently considered, and I am not prepared to say that I would be willing to vote for it. But I am in favor of walking squarely up to the rack and voting upon this proposition directly, and not dodge responsibility behind this scheme of voting a clerk to each member of each committee, for every member of the House is a member of some committee. We should therefore, in my opinion, as suggested by the gentleman from Georgia, refer this back to the Committee on Accounts and let them submit a new report, so that we may all be able to vote intelligently upon this question.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON].

Mr. MATSON. I believe this matter ought not to be recommitted to the Committee on Accounts, but that the subject ought to be disposed of to-day. It is certainly important to the transaction of the business of the House that this matter should be settled, because the committees are likely to do little, if any, work until it is disposed of.

I apprehend it will be found after the discussion here that the Committee on Accounts has done about all it will dare to do under any circumstances. If the House should instruct the Committee on Accounts to report this matter back, giving to each committee a clerk, perhaps they would take the responsibility. Without such instruction I am quite sure they would not, for the law does not provide enough clerks to give one to each committee. It seems to me that as the matter is before the House now, it is the duty of the House to dispose of it. If the House believes these committees that are unprovided for should have each a clerk, let us vote on that proposition. If the House believes the Committee on Claims ought to have an additional clerk, let us vote on that proposition.

I apprehend the matter of giving a clerk to each member of the House will not be seriously considered when the vote is finally taken. I apprehend gentlemen are not ready to-day by a simple resolution of the House to create three hundred additional officers hurriedly at this early period of the session. I believe that responsibility will not be taken. I think this matter ought to be disposed of now, and that the Committee on Accounts ought to be sustained as far as it has gone, and that these matters of amendment ought to be disposed of in order that the business of the House may proceed.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR].

Mr. KERR. I was very much pleased at the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] in regard to the question of economy when he urged his party friends to stand by him and vote for a measure of economy. And I do not think this side of the House can absolve themselves from the necessity of standing by economy when measures of this kind are under consideration. I do not believe it is necessary for the average member of this House to employ a clerk either in regard to matters before the House or matters concerning his relations to his constituents. Believing that that is not necessary, and in view of the remarks made by the gentleman from Mississippi, that if a matter was before a committee upon which any member desired information the services of the clerk might be employed to obtain that information, I think the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] ought not to be adopted.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DOUGHERTY].

Mr. DOUGHERTY. As far as this discussion has gone it appears to me that the principal opposition to the full scope of this resolution comes from the gentlemen who are chairmen of committees, and therefore have clerks. They talk upon this matter upon the broad platform of statesmanship. Now, I take this ground, that if every member of this House had a clerk the business of his constituents would be better attended to than it is at the present time.

I would vote, sir, for a proposition to abolish every committee of this House which was not of sufficient importance to authorize the employment of a clerk to attend to the business of that committee; and I will go further. The Speaker well knows, and so does every member of this House who has served here for several terms, that every legislative appropriation bill returning from the Senate comes into this House with an amendment tacked upon it giving each Senator a clerk. What is there in the duties to be performed by a Senator which should entitle him to a clerk more than there is in those duties which are supposed to be performed by a Representative? Put the question before the House, to say nothing of the whole people of this country, in its bare light and it will be seen that that action upon the part of the Senate is simply a mode of increasing the pay of a Senator. Now let the same step be taken by the members of this House; let it be called by its real name—increasing the pay of a member—and he has just as much right to that increase of pay as has a Senator of the United States.

Furthermore, sir, while the resolution of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] was under discussion, I asked him a question and he answered it. My question was whether the effect of his resolution would not be to put all of the clerkships into the District of Columbia on the ground that a gentleman from a distance could not afford to come here to take a place? In answer to that question he said that plenty of gentlemen from my district would come here. I deny that statement in toto.

Mr. MCRAE. If I was mistaken in supposing the district of the gentleman could furnish fit clerks, I beg his pardon, and get them from other districts.

Mr. DOCKERY. They might come from the district of the gentleman from Arkansas, but I do say that you could not get any man from my district in the State of Florida, who is competent to be a clerk of a committee of this House, to come here for $100 a month. He can do better at home. Now, sir, as my time is short, I have just this further to say: The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], both of them chairmen of committees, inveigh against the action of the majority of this House in voting themselves clerks——

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman will allow me I will say that I have voted against this proposition and spoken against it a dozen times, and have done so when I had no clerk. I have always opposed it, and so has my friend from Alabama.

Mr. DOCKERY. But most of the time the gentleman has been chairman of a committee and has been provided with a clerk. But, Mr. Speaker, be that as it may, something has been said here about the motives which actuate members in voting upon this question. Now, sir, I deny that such language, impugning in any way the motives of members of this body, is parliamentary. My motive in voting to furnish myself a clerk as a member of three committees of this House is that my constituents may be better served than they can be while I have to attend to the duties of a clerk myself. Gentlemen talk glibly here about responsibility and about approaching elections. Sir, I believe that the American people care very little how much of the public money may be spent provided they get some adequate return for the expenditure in the way of services to themselves or their representatives. This matter of "economy" is worn out. [Laughter.] Each side as it has been in the majority here from time to time has preached "economy"——

Mr. PERKINS. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am obliged to the gentleman from Kansas. I shall probably not consume the two minutes.

Speaking of the question of motives, I simply wish to make this statement, plainly and without the violation of any parliamentary usage, that the real reason why every member of this House has not long since had a clerk is that gentlemen have been afraid of their constituents. [Laughter.]

Mr. PERKINS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE].

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I favored this proposition in the last Congress. It was not then in precisely this form. It had to come to the House as a report from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, and, as I understood, it was the unanimous report of that committee, except one member. It therefore had the indorsement of the Democratic members of that committee, and it met with the favorable consideration of the House until the closing hours of the session, when, under the press of business and the want of time, it failed of consideration.

I should rather have the proposition in the form in which it was presented by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws than in the form in which it is now presented; but rather than see it fail, I shall support this proposition, voting to each member of the House a clerk. I agree with the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DOUGHERTY] that the work of every member will be more faithfully and better done, and that he will render better service to his constituents when he has a clerk. The work and the details which each member is required to attend to would be much better attended to under such circumstances, and in the interest of wise and well-considered legislation on this floor I advocate this proposition. I think that if members were relieved from a great many of the duties that are now incumbent upon them as to small matters of detail, they would be able to give more intelligent attention to their general duties as legislators. All round, this proposition would work to the advantage of the people of the country.

Some gentlemen say that these clerks are not needed. I do not know what constituencies those are whose representatives can perform their duties here without the aid of clerks. I suppose the large majority of the members of this House require and employ clerks. The purpose of this proposition, as it comes from the Committee on Accounts, is to give clerks to certain committees, which committees have really nothing in the world to do, so that in such cases the clerk becomes, in point of fact, the clerk of the chairman of the committee. Why not take this matter squarely by the horns and meet the issue boldly now, before the November elections, and vote to each member of this House a clerk? My constituents will stand it, and I do not believe there is a constituency in the country that will not stand it. I believe in having the courage to do what is right. I believe that these clerks are needed, and we ought to have the courage to say so by our votes, and not equivocate and beat the devil around the bush, as we do when we support a proposition giving clerks to the Committees on Expenditures in the State Department and in the War Department, and various others that have nothing at all to do. As I have said, I would prefer to have the proposition in the good shape in which it came from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws at the last session; but for fear that we may not be able to get the proposition in that form, and that if action be delayed the proposition may be defeated, I intend to vote for the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. PERKINS. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Kansas is mistaken as to the number of clerks that would be allowed under his resolution. I ask the Clerk to read the proposition again.

The Clerk read as follows:

That each member of every committee shall be entitled to a clerk during the session of Congress, who shall receive the monthly salary of $100, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House: Provided, That only one clerk shall be allowed to each member.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, if I understand the proposition aright, every member of the House, being of course a member of some committee, would be entitled to one clerk as a member of a committee, and the committees are entitled to certain clerks in addition.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman does not understand the proposition.

Mr. SPRINGER. The chairman of a committee in appointing a clerk for the committee does not appoint a clerk for himself; the appointee is known as the committee's clerk; he is not the member's clerk at all. But this proposition would give to each chairman of a committee the right to appoint a clerk for himself individually, in addition to the appointment he may have made as chairman of the committee. Take my own case. I am chairman of one committee and a member of another committee. Under this proposition I would have a right as a committee member to appoint a clerk, because the clerk I have appointed as chairman of a committee is the clerk of the Committee on Territories, not of the individual who acts as chairman. I think if this matter were properly understood members would not vote these additional clerks. There are forty-two standing committees of the House; so that under this proposition there would be forty-two committee clerks, and then there would be in addition an individual clerk for every member of the House. Upon this construction I am opposed to the amendment, as also upon the general merits of the proposition.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT].

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, so far as my experience in this House enables me to judge, I believe the duties devolving upon members here are of such a character that no gentleman can perform them satisfactorily to himself and with proper regard to the interests of his constituents without a clerk. And I stand here to-day ready to vote to give every member of this House a clerk. I am not afraid to go home and meet my people on this issue; for I would tell them that the man does not live, and has not lived, who can attend to his duties in this Hall, attend to his committees, visit the Departments upon business of his constituents, answer his correspondents, and do all this work without the assistance of a clerk.

Coming to the question of clerks of committees, I can see no reason why we should make distinctions between one committee and another—why the Committee on Claims, for instance, should have two clerks and in other cases a single clerk be required to divide his labors between two committees. Why is that, sir?

Mr. LANHAM. The Committee on Claims has perhaps more work to do than any other committee.

Mr. SCOTT. I do not know that such is the case. No gentleman on this floor can say what work will devolve on any committee under the rules of this House, and no gentleman can say that the chairman or the members of any particular committee can go on and discharge their duties without a clerk. For my part, if we are not going to give each member of this House a clerk, then I say that, in justice to the various committees, each committee ought to have a clerk, irrespective of what may have been the practice in the past.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK].

Mr. HOUK. Mr. Speaker, I propose to vote for this measure, giving to every member of this House a clerk, and in casting that vote I am not voting for my individual benefit; I am voting for the benefit of my constituents. I presume there is not a man on this floor who attends to his duties as a Representative who is not compelled to employ a clerk. I have had one ever since I have been a member of this body, and I think the constituency that would be unwilling to sanction this aid to their Representative here would naturally be a constituency that did not understand the duties of the Representative.

It is the experience of every man here that it is utterly impossible for any gentleman to keep up with the various questions which are brought before this body, to examine properly the facts and the circumstances, the law and the reasons surrounding them, and at the same time keep up, without clerical assistance, that tremendous correspondence which is absolutely necessary in looking after the details of business entrusted to members of this House. Therefore, in casting my vote for this proposition, I do so for the purpose of enabling me, as the Representative of the people of the Second Congressional district of Tennessee, to give attention to the legislation of this body. I propose to let the people, through their Treasury, pay for a clerk to aid me in looking after their interests in the various departments of the Government and keeping up with the details of my official duty.

One other word. In giving this vote to facilitate the public business, I am in nowise alarmed about going back to my constituents and telling them that I thus voted.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON].

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, upon the general question as to the desirability of clerks for members of this House, whether that question be considered with reference to the business of the House, the thoroughness with which we are to perform our public duties, or the interests of our constituents, I have no doubt whatever. So far as my acquaintance extends, I believe that every member of this House, unless he be able to provide himself with a clerk outside of the salary allowed him by law, is compelled to devote a very large proportion of his time to the performance of merely clerical duty. I do not believe that the law fixing the salaries of members of Congress contemplated this state of affairs.

There is another thing we ought not to forget. Times are not now as they were five years ago, or even ten years. There are gentlemen who still occupy seats on the floor of this House who were here when the population of the United States was thirty millions, instead of sixty millions, as it is to-day. They remember the time when the bills introduced here in a single session were numbered by hundreds, instead of by tens of thousands, as they literally are to-day.

For my own part, I believe it would be in the interest of practical economy to our individual constituents if a clerk or the allowance for a clerk were provided for each and every member. I voted for this proposition in the last Congress. I voted for it because I believed it was right. I believe it is right to-day, and therefore shall vote for it to-day.

There is another thing to which I may advert. We have before us here from session to session bills in the interest of labor, in regard to the eight-hour law and laws of like import. I venture to affirm, on an average, the members of this body are engaged in their public duties not eight hours a day or ten hours a day, but I believe there are more gentlemen on this floor who give from twelve to thirteen hours a day to their public duties than there are who give less than that time. I do not believe our constituents want us to do this. I do not believe they ask us to busy ourselves for hours each day performing work which a clerk can be hired for $100 a month to do as well. Therefore I shall vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. PERKINS. I now yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say it is not the part of wisdom to legislate by indirection. We all knew at the time of our election that our salaries were $5,000 a year and mileage. By indirection to-day we attempt to add $300,000 more to the salaries of the members of this House under the guise of aiding the committees by furnishing each one of them with a clerk. Now, I insist, if this proposition is not to take effect in the future, so the people can say when they select their representatives they shall not have the power to supplement their salaries by an indirect vote, by indirect legislation, it will be unfair to our constituents. It is an improper and unusual mode of legislation thus, under the guise of aiding each chairman of a committee, to allow him $1,000 for a clerk for two sessions of Congress, when at the time each member was elected to this House he knew his salary was only $5,000 a year without any supplementary or additional amount of this character.

Mr. PERKINS. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE].

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I am glad indeed this House did not take alarm at the remark of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT], who notified us we were on the eve of a Presidential election and to prepare for the battle, and that economy must again be the rallying cry. Now, I am not surprised to hear that cry come from him, because he has a clerk. [Laughter.]

It is physically impossible for me to do all the work I am called upon to do for my constituents. I have answered every letter and attended to every request coming from them, and I have my whole time taken up by that work, and my colleague [Mr. BROWNE] says he does not need a clerk, or that he will not vote for a clerk. Now, look at this desk—there are seventy-five letters unanswered [laughter] and as many more perhaps at home unanswered.

Mr. STRUBLE. And besides other questions, there is the tariff.

Mr. STEELE. The gentleman has a right to his position on this question, and he can vote against the resolution allowing a clerk, but for myself I am going to vote for a clerk in order that I may serve my constituents better. I had the courage to do it two years ago, and if my constituents do not want me to have a clerk during the succeeding Congress they can say so and I will not be their Representative.

If the House sees proper to vote us a clerk I shall be very glad indeed, and I would call special attention to the position taken by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT], who comes boldly out in favor of doing so. He has the wealth to hire a dozen clerks if he wants to and not feel it as a drain upon him, and yet he has some compassion upon poor people who are laboring under other circumstances. He is not going to be a demagogue because he has got a clerk for his committee, either, but is willing that others shall have equal privileges. I hope, therefore, that this side of the House will have the courage of its own convictions, and if they have constituents who do not want them to come here to undertake to do their duty better and more satisfactorily, then they ought to be willing to stay at home.

Mr. PERKINS. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES].

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, the policy of the Government of the United States, unlike that of Great Britain, is to pay its legislators for their services. This is done because it enables the people of any Congressional district to be represented if they choose by the poorest man in the district. They expect efficient services to be here rendered by their representatives.

No gentleman who has been here for even one session will say that any man can perform all the duties efficiently and faithfully pertaining to his position without some clerical assistance. I could enlarge upon this, as I did in a report from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, which I submitted in a former session of Congress, and which gave fully the reasons, which are manifest on reflection, why a clerk should be allowed to members.

But, sir, as my time is limited, I only care now to say that while I favor the general proposition of a clerk to every Senator and Representative who is not the chairman of a committee, and therefore unable to utilize the services of the clerk of that committee, yet the present proposition does not meet my approval.

It is a simple, naked proposition that the members of the House of Representatives who are not chairmen of committees shall have a clerk during the sessions of Congress at a compensation of $100 a month.

I am in favor of a general law making the compensation uniform and applying it to the clerks of Senators as well as to the clerks of Representatives. But in that respect in my judgment the proposition now submitted is so defective that I can not vote for it, though I am prepared at all times to vote for a well-considered and matured proposition to carry out the general scope of the idea.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has three minutes.

Mr. PERKINS. I would like permission to extend the time two minutes longer in order to give the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] two minutes, reserving three to close the debate. I ask unanimous consent, therefore, that the time be extended for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PERKINS. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT].

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, it has been more than once suggested in the course of this debate that the reason of my opposition to this measure is that I have a clerk as chairman of one of the committees of the House. That is a mistake. The Committee on Naval Affairs has a clerk, but that clerk writes very few of my letters. I write fully nine-tenths of them myself as a general proposition; but sometimes in the last Congress when I found myself unable to write my letters, I took the money out of my own pocket and paid a stenographer to come and take them down from my dictation and write them out for me. That is what I expect to do during this session; and every gentleman upon the floor can do the same thing if he desires it.

But this is just, as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr STEWART] has said, a plain proposition to increase our own salaries by an amount ranging from $500 to $1,000 per year. It is the same thing that was done in the back-salary grab, so well remembered in this country. Men came here elected to serve at $5,000 a year, and with that agreement made with the people, for that was the implied contract on which they were elected, that being then the law, they voted themselves during their term of service $7,500 a year. Very few of them ever got back. In principle this is precisely the same, for every gentleman can pay if he chooses for this service out of the amount—$5,000 a year, which was the salary by law when he was elected—the necessary clerk-hire to write his letters.

Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman from Kansas allow me a moment?

Mr. PERKINS. I have but three minutes to close the debate.

I desire to notice first the argument made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT], which was originally, doubtless, suggested by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE], that this proposition involves the increase of the compensation as now fixed by law of the members of this House.

The language of the resolution is that this compensation is to go to a clerk, who shall assist in part the member serving his constituency, in the running of errands at the Departments, in looking after that errand work that every member of this House is called upon to perform, and which errand work largely takes from him his usefulness as a member of this House.

There is not a member of this House, I care not what his experience is in matters of legislation, that is able to look after his correspondence and his errand work and at the same time give intelligent attention to the business of this House. Every member here of twenty-four hours' experience on work knows this is a very important thing and in private conversation will recognize and confess the necessity for a clerk being assigned to each member. I am glad I represent a constituency that is willing a member shall vote for a proposition that will give him this assistance in doing this errand work and enable him to look after their wants in the various departments of the Government. The time of the member which should be devoted to matters of legislation is largely occupied by this errand work to which I have referred. This proposition does not contemplate giving a dollar to a member, but it does contemplate that these clerks who are to be called to assist the constituency of the members in the doing of this work shall be paid the not very extravagant sum of $100 per month.

I am very glad that I represent a constituency that casts more than 2,500 votes. If I represented a constituency that only cast 2,500 votes perhaps I might be able to do their work. [Applause.] But I represent a constituency which cast 32,000 votes and more, and there are members here representing districts which cast more than double the number cast in the entire ten Congressional districts of Georgia. And when you ask a member to do the work of 32,000 electors, answering their letters, running their errands, and looking after their various interests, you ask an impossibility. I do not think it is the sense of the people of America that these labors should be imposed upon any one man, and in the interest of good legislation and in the interest of our constituents, who want their every interest carefully and attentively looked after, I offer this amendment.

I demand the previous question.

Mr. MILLS. Pending the call for the previous question I move to recommit the report of the committee, with the amendments that have been offered, to the Committee on Accounts. I desired to submit some remarks, but the demand for the previous question cuts me off.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I desire to be informed whether at this stage it would be in order to offer a substitute for the proposition of the gentleman from Kansas?

The SPEAKER. It would not. Only one motion is in order at this stage, the motion to commit with or without instructions.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Will it be in order to offer an amendment giving instructions to the committee?

The SPEAKER. An amendment to a motion to recommit is in order.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I move, then, to amend the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] by giving to the committee the instructions which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. That is in order.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Pending the demand for the previous question is it in order to move to recommit?

The SPEAKER. By the express language of the rule the motion to recommit is in order pending the demand for the previous question or after the previous question has been ordered.

The Clerk will now report the instructions offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSTON].

The Clerk read as follows:

That it shall be unlawful for any clerk of a committee of the House of Representatives to perform any duty for the chairman of the committee or any member thereof that does not pertain to the business before the committee.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana to the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

The question being taken; there were—ayes 70, noes 94.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 46 members voting therefor.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Let the amendment be again read.

The amendment was again read.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 109, nays 164, not voting 50; as follows:

YEAS—109.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PERKINS, the reading of the names of members voting was dispensed with.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. BELMONT with Mr. KELLEY, for the rest of the day.

Mr. DOUGHERTY with Mr. WADE.

Mr. MCKINLEY with Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, for this day.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi, with Mr. BUTTERWORTH, for the rest of the day.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] to recommit the report and pending amendments to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Would it be in order now to offer an amendment to further instruct that committee?

The SPEAKER. It would.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I move to amend the substitute of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] by striking out $100 and inserting $75.

The SPEAKER. That is an amendment to the proposition which is pending.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I intend it as an amendment to the motion to instruct the committee.

The SPEAKER. That is in order. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] moves to amend the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS], so as to instruct the committee as stated in his amendment.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, was not the motion of the gentleman to instruct the committee?

The SPEAKER. It was.

Mr. MILLS. Can two motions to instruct be pending at the same time?

The SPEAKER. One motion to recommit with instructions is all that is in order under the rule, but the motion to commit without instructions is as amendable as any other motion until the previous question is ordered on it. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] moves to amend the motion of the gentleman from Texas, so as to instruct the committee to report back the resolution with a proposition to pay these clerks $75 per month instead of $100 per month, and the question now is upon that amendment.

The amendment of Mr. CUTCHEON was rejected.

Mr. MILLS. I now move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas to recommit the report and pending amendments to the Committee on Accounts.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 121, noes 100.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLS moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LONG. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. Under the rules of the House, the regular order is the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and resolutions. Under this call, public bills, and joint and concurrent resolutions, and resolutions and memorials of State and Territorial Legislatures, are in order; also, resolutions of inquiry addressed to heads of Departments.

PROCEEDS OF CAPTURED AND ABANDONED PROPERTY.

SUBSISTENCE DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY.

Mr. WHEELER also introduced a bill (H. R. 3273) to effect a rearrangement of the grades of office in the Subsistence Department of the Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

FORFEITURE OF RAILROAD LAND GRANT.

Mr. OATES introduced a bill (H. R. 3274) to forfeit certain lands granted to the Mobile and Girard Railroad Company, to confirm the titles to purchasers, and to absolve said company from its obligations as a land-grant railroad; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

LEGAL PRACTICE BEFORE CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEES, ETC.

Mr. OATES (by request) also introduced a bill (H. R. 3275) to establish a uniform system for the practice of attorneys at law before the committees of Congress and the Executive Departments, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

SETTLERS ON DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

Mr. OATES (by request) also introduced a bill (H. R. 3276) for the relief of the settlers upon lands along the Des Moines River above the Raccoon Forks, in the State of Iowa; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ACCOUNTS OF MARSHALS, ETC.

Mr. OATES also introduced a bill (H. R. 3277) to amend section 856 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to the payment of accounts of marshals and other officers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, and ordered to be printed.

SECTIONS 3480 AND 4716, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. OATES also introduced a bill (H. R. 3278) to repeal in part and to limit sections 3480 and 4716 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, and ordered to be printed.

FOREST FIRES ON UNITED STATES LANDS.

Mr. OATES also introduced a bill (H. R. 3279) to define and punish the offense of setting fire to and burning woods, grass, or forests on lands belonging to the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. OATES also submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That section 33 of Rule XI of the House of Representatives be amended so as to read as follows, to wit:

"To the revision and codification of the statutes of the United States, and to the amendment or repeal of the same, which do not relate to judicial proceedings: to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws."

Mr. OATES also submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That sections 2 and 3 of Rule XIV of the House of Representatives be amended by striking out the words "one hour" wherever they occur, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "thirty minutes," and by adding to section 2 the following: "And any member who obtains the recognition of the Speaker for the purpose of debate shall yield any part of his time to more than two other members."

IMMIGRATION OF FOREIGNERS.

Mr. OATES also submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire into and report to this House during the present session of Congress, by bill or otherwise, what further legislation may be necessary to limit and restrict the number of foreigners who are annually immigrating to the United States, and to secure better protection to the people of this country against the evils arising from indiscriminate admission to domicile and citizenship of paupers, criminals, outlaws, and turbulent persons from other countries.

REGISTRY OF FOREIGN-BUILT SHIPS.

Mr. DUNN introduced a bill (H. R. 3280) to amend section 4132 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, so as to authorize the purchase of foreign-built ships by citizens of the United States, and to permit the same to be registered as vessels of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and ordered to be printed.

DIVISION OF GREAT SIOUX RESERVATION.

Mr. PEEL also (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 3286) to divide the Great Sioux reservation in Dakota and Nebraska, and to secure to the Indians the title in fee-simple to lands in severalty, and to open a portion to actual settlement, and to provide for the better education and civilization of the Sioux Indians; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SIOUX NATION OF INDIANS, DAKOTA.

Mr. PEEL also (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 3287) to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians in Dakota into separate reservations, and to secure a relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ARKANSAS STATE DEBT.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 3288) authorizing the settlement of the debt due the United States by the State of Arkansas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL-BANK NOTES.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, for Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, introduced a bill (H. R. 3289) to provide for the investment of the lawful money deposited in the Treasury by the national banks for the redemption of their circulating notes, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I move the bill be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH in the chair). The Chair has examined the bill and is satisfied it should be referred, under the rules, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I have introduced the bill at the request of the gentleman from Kentucky, and at his request I have moved its reference to the Committee on Ways and Means, which I believe to be the proper committee.

Mr. WILKINS. In response to what the gentlemen from Arkansas has said I wish to state that all bills of that character in the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses went to the Committee on Banking and Currency. The bill of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] was reported from that committee in the Forty-eighth Congress, and again in the Forty-ninth Congress a bill almost verbatim, word for word with this one. It refers to moneys deposited by national banks in the Treasury to redeem outstanding circulation, and has nothing whatever to do with the national debt except that the same was invested in Government bonds. It belongs exclusively to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. If in order to make one or two observations, I will add a word to what I have already said. I call the attention of the House to the fact that this does not relate to national-bank notes that are secured by Government bonds. It relates exclusively to those national-bank notes which have been assumed by the Federal Government like the greenbacks. It is to meet the payment of that class of national-bank notes, and is purely a strictly governmental obligation—in other words, an obligation just the same as the greenbacks are. Upon that ground, and knowing it to be the wish of my colleagues upon the committee, who believed it to be the proper committee for reference, I ask the House to send this bill to the Committee on Ways and Means, upon which committee the gentleman who offered the bill sits.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will read the rule bearing upon this question:

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees * * * as follows: subjects relating to the revenue and the bonded debt of the United States: to the Committee on Ways and Means.

To banking and currency: to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The Chair thinks this relates to banking and currency, but the gentleman from Arkansas moves its reference to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Let the bill be read.

Mr. COX. Is this question open for discussion?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that debate is not in order. The Chair did indulge the gentleman from Arkansas and the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency for a moment; but under the rules of the House bills must be referred without debate.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas by striking out "Ways and Means" and inserting "Banking and Currency."

Mr. COX. Is that motion debatable?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. DINGLEY, the House divided, and there were—ayes 106, noes 26.

So (no further count being demanded) the bill was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas (by request), also introduced a bill (H. R. 3290) to amend section 685 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads:

Whereas it appears from the report of the Pacific Railroad Commissioners appointed under the act of Congress approved March 3, 1887, that the Pacific railroads, through their management, officers, and boards of directors, have for years constantly and persistently refused to comply with the acts of Congress approved July 1, 1862, July 2, 1864, March 3, 1873, and May 8, 1878; and

Whereas it appears from said report that in addition to the defiant refusal of said companies to comply with said acts of Congress, the officers and managers thereof have squandered large sums out of their gross earnings in extravagant and unprofitable enterprises and in the payment of interest and subsidies forbidden by said acts of Congress, and have divided among themselves, in violation of law, enormous sums of money, amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars, in defraud of the Government and of the people of the United States; and

Whereas the directors of said companies have since the passage of the act approved March 3, 1873, divided among themselves and other pretended stockholders and creditors large sums of money as dividends and subsidies, which were not from the actual net earnings of said roads, but from moneys which should have been applied in liquidation of the indebtedness of said roads to the United States; and

Whereas said companies have since the passage of said acts of Congress issued new stock, mortgages, pledges, and other incumbrances without the consent of Congress, thus squandering the funds of said companies, impairing their credit, and destroying the value of the United States lien upon the same; and

Whereas it appears from said report that said companies, in order to avoid their just obligations to the Government, have unduly and fraudulently increased their indebtedness greatly in excess of the amount actually expended, and in turn have levied excessive charges upon the people tributary to said lines to pay interest and dividends upon said fictitious and fraudulent indebtedness; and

Whereas the act approved May 7, 1878, provides that if said railroad companies shall fail to perform all and singular the requirements of said act and of all other acts relating to said companies, such failure shall operate as a forfeiture of all the rights, privileges, grants, and franchises derived or obtained by said companies from the United States; and

Whereas said last-named act provides that it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States to cause such forfeiture to be judicially enforced; and

Whereas it appears from said report of the Commissioners that the said Pacific railroad companies have by their unlawful acts aforesaid and by other and divers unlawful transactions, forfeited all their rights, privileges, grants, and franchises: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Attorney-General of the United States be, and he is hereby, directed to report to this House what steps, if any, have been taken by him to secure a judicial enforcement of said forfeiture, and if none have been taken, that he inform this House his reasons for not proceeding as directed by law.

HASTINGS AND DAKOTA RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. LIND also submitted the following resolution; which was read and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands:

Whereas Congress by an act entitled "An act making an additional grant of lands to the State of Minnesota, etc.," approved July 4, 1866, made a grant of lands to said State for the benefit of the Hastings and Dakota Railroad Company, a corporation created under the laws of the State of Minnesota, which act provides that if the line proposed to be aided by the grant was not constructed within ten years of its acceptance the lands granted by said act and not patented should revert to the United States; and

Whereas said company failed to construct said line within the time limited by said act, and such failure has not been waived by Congress; and

Whereas the supreme court of the State of Minnesota has, upon the relation of the Hon. John W. Hahn, attorney-general of said State, against said railroad company, by its decision made and filed in said court on the 22d day of December, 1886, adjudged the charter of the said Hastings and Dakota Railroad Company forfeited, and said corporation dissolved, on the ground that the said corporation in the month of January, 1880, sold and conveyed its road and franchise, and ceased to exercise the business for which it was created; and

Whereas the Interior Department has nevertheless caused to be certified to the State for the benefit of said company over one hundred and forty thousand acres of land since it ceased to exist as a railroad company, and there are still selections pending in the Interior Department for nearly twelve thousand acres of land claimed by such defunct corporation, all of which lands are largely occupied by bona fide settlers claiming them under the land laws of the United States: Therefore,

Resolved, That the honorable Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, requested and directed to refrain from certifying to the State of Minnesota for the benefit of the said Hastings and Dakota Railroad Company until further action is taken by this House in the premises.

Also, that the honorable Attorney-General of the United States be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the House with all due speed upon the proceedings had and taken in the supreme court of the State of Minnesota for the forfeiture and dissolution of the said Hastings and Dakota Railroad Company, and also why suit has not been brought to cancel the certifications issued to said State for lands for the benefit of said corporation since January, 1880, and also to report upon any other matter relative to the status of such lands which may aid the House in determining upon the proper action to be taken for the protection of the settlers on said lands.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is evident that we can not complete the call of States to-day, and as the weather outside is very inclement, I desire to move an adjournment, with the understanding that unanimous consent be given to-morrow for the continuation of this call.

Mr. RANDALL. This proposition comes from a gentleman whose State has been called. There are some of us who would be glad to remain here in order to introduce our propositions.

Mr. SPRINGER. Perhaps the gentleman is not aware that the weather outside is very stormy.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois move that the House adjourn?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HATCH. Pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal, the call of States be continued until completed.

Mr. RANDALL. That would modify the difficulty, of course; but pending these propositions I ask unanimous consent to have printed, for the use of the House, the deficiency bill, which will be reported to-morrow from the Appropriations Committee, a bill embracing deficiency appropriations which failed to become a law at the last session of Congress.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Committee on Appropriations will have leave to have the bill printed.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] asks unanimous consent that to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal, the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills be continued. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PORTRAITS OF EX-SPEAKERS.

Mr. LONG. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution which I send to the desk may be adopted now.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Thursday, January 19, at 3 o'clock p. m., be set apart for the presentation to the House of Representatives of portraitsof ex-Speakers Sedgwick, Varnum, and Banks by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and that upon that occasion the committee of the executive council of that State be admitted to the floor.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered, and adopted.

Mr. LONG moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING FOR APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE, ETC.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask consent to submit for adoption at this time two resolutions which relate to business of the Committee on Appropriations, and which it is customary for the House to adopt.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be authorized to have printed and bound all documents for the use of the said committee that they may deem necessary in connection with subjects in relation to appropriations being considered or to be considered by the said committee during the said Congress.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered, and adopted.

The following resolution, also submitted by Mr. RANDALL, was read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations and its subcommittees have leave to sit during the sessions of the House for the present session.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered, and adopted.

REDUCTION OF INDIAN RESERVATIONS, ETC.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication of 30th of December, 1887, from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting, with accompanying papers, two additional reports from the commission appointed to conduct negotiations with certain tribes and bands of Indians for reduction of reservations, etc., under the provisions of the act of May 15, 1886 (24 Statutes, 44), providing therefor.

INTERNATIONAL MERIDIAN CONFERENCE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State, recommending that this Government take action to approve the resolutions of the Washington International Meridian Conference, held in October, 1884, in favor of fixing a prime meridian and a universal day, and to invite the powers with whom this country has diplomatic relations to accede to the same.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, January 9, 1888.

SECURITY OF LIFE AND PROPERTY AT SEA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of State relative to the requests which have been received from various maritime associations and chambers of commerce of this country, asking that measures be taken to convoke an international conference at Washington of representatives of all maritime nations to devise measures for the greater security of life and property at sea. I commend this important subject to the favorable consideration of Congress.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, January 9, 1888.

PROTECTION OF SUBMARINE CABLES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report of the Secretary of State relative to the legislation required to carry into effect the international convention of March 14, 1884, for the protection of submarine cables, to which this country is a party.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, January 9, 1888.

The motion of Mr. SPRINGER that the House adjourn was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

CONSTITUTIONAL CENTENNIAL AND DISCOVERY OF AMERICA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication from the New Orleans (La.) Maritime Association; which was read, and referred to the Select Committee on the Centennial of the Constitution and the Discovery of America:

[New Orleans Maritime Association. A. K. Miller, president; A. J. R. Landauer, vice-president; L. La Combe, secretary.]

NEW ORLEANS, December 31, 1887.

SIR: I have the honor of transmitting you copy of the following resolutions unanimously adopted by this association at a meeting held in their exchange on 27th instant, namely:

"Whereas it is proposed to celebrate at the city of Washington, in 1889, the centennial anniversary of constitutional government in the Western Hemisphere, as a joint tribute by the several American Republics to the Constitution of the parent Republic, the United States; and

"Whereas it is also proposed to hold at our national capital, in 1892, an international celebration of the discovery of America by Columbus, and an exposition of the antiquities, arts, history, and industries of the three Americas is intended to be permanent: Be it therefore

"Resolved, That the New Orleans Maritime Association heartily favors this movement towards more intimate commercial and social relations between the several sister nations of the three Americas, and commends it to the people of the United States as a matter of great practical importance in promoting friendly intercourse; and further

"Resolved, That the secretary be directed to transmit a copy of these resolutions to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives."

Respectfully,

L. LA COMBE,
Secretary.

Hon. J. J. INGALLS,
President of the United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication from the Merchants' Exchange and Board of Trade of Portland, Me.; which was read, and referred to the Select Committee on the Centennial of the Constitution and the Discovery of America:

[Merchants' Exchange and Board of Trade, 26 Exchange street. Jos. W. Blabon, president; M. N. Rich, secretary.]

PORTLAND, ME., January 5, 1888.

To the President of the Senate:

At a meeting of the directors of the Board of Trade of Portland, Me., held this day, the following was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas it is proposed to hold at the national capital, in 1889, a joint celebration by the sixteen American Republics in honor of the centennial anniversary of the inauguration of constitutional government upon the Western Hemisphere; also, to hold at the national capital, in 1892, a world's exposition in honor of the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus, which exposition of the history, arts, and industries of the three Americas is intended to be permanent:

"Resolved, That the Board of Trade of Portland, Me., heartily favors this movement toward more intimate relations between the several sister nations of the three Americas, and commends it to the people of the United States as a matter of great practical importance.

"Resolved, That the secretary be instructed to send copies of these resolutions to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate, and to the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives."

Attest: M. N. RICH, [SEAL.] Secretary.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of Lewis Maish and other Union ex-prisoners of war, of Minneapolis, Minn., praying for the enactment of certain legislation in behalf of dependents of their class; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SHERMAN presented resolutions adopted by the Zanesville (Ohio) Typographical Union, No. 199, favoring a restoration of wages at the Government Printing Office to what they have formerly been; which were referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of citizens of Illinois, praying for the passage of the bill to prohibit the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CULLOM. I present a petition of citizens of Illinois, calling the attention of Congress to the growing evil of employing convict labor in various trades, thus throwing operatives out of employment and making unproductive long-established industries, and also calling attention to the character of legislation necessary to prevent the evils spoken of. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PADDOCK presented 8 memorials, signed by J. B. Brazleton, J. D. Howry, J. H. Halderman, Perry Walker, W. R. McCandless, Thomas L. Sexton, James S. Church, and 500 other citizens of Nebraska, remonstrating against the admission of Utah as a State so long as the civil power of that Territory remains under the control of the Mormon Church; which were referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented a petition of citizens of the Second and Third Congressional districts of Nebraska, praying for the passage of the bill for the prohibition of the liquor traffic in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. ALLISON presented the petition of Josephine Suffesynska Jarocka, of Washington, D. C., praying compensation for a claim she has against the Government as a relative of Count Casimir Pulaski; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of citizens of the Second, Third, and Sixth Congressional districts of Iowa, praying for the passage of a bill for the prohibition of the liquor traffic in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented the petition of Maurice Quimby, of Agency, Iowa, praying for the removal of the charge of desertion against him in the War Department; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FARWELL presented a petition of citizens of Illinois, praying for the passage of the bill for the prohibition of the sale and manufacture of liquor in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. QUAY presented the petition of Jacob Rohn, late private of Company A, Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, praying for the removal of the charge of desertion from his military record; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of George W. Townsend, of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the purchase and adoption by Congress of the Wherewithal Seven Word System of education; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the repeal of certain restrictions upon the mailing of third and fourth class matter imposed by the Post-Office Department; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented the petition of the Pennsylvania State Temperance Union, praying for the submission to the several States of a constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture of alcoholic liquors as a beverage; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented the petition of the State Temperance Union of Pennsylvania, praying for the appointment of a national commission to investigate the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of citizens of the Eleventh, Seventeenth, Twenty-fourth, and Twenty-seventh Congressional districts of Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of the bill for the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I find on my desk a petition or petitions from people who I have no doubt are respectable, in this District and elsewhere, praying for the prohibition of the traffic in alcoholic drinks in the District of Columbia, which I pray may be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I will add that I hope the committee will report a bill accordingly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GORMAN presented the petition of Annie Slater, of Laurel, Md., praying to be allowed a pension for her services as an Army nurse; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McPHERSON presented a petition of citizens of the First, Second, Third, Fourth, and Sixth Congressional districts of New Jersey, praying for the passage of a bill for the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANDERSON. I present a petition numerously signed by citizens of Plattsmouth, Nebr., praying for the erection of a public building at that point. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. I have received from Boston, dated January 7, 1888, the following resolution, adopted by the directors of the American Institution of Instruction:

Whereas it appears by the last census that more than 6,000,000 of persons in the United States are illiterate; and whereas this number from immigration and the great lack of educational means is yearly increasing:

Resolved, That the board of directors of the American Institution of Instruction, in annual meeting assembled, respectfully urges upon Congress the enactment of a bill providing national aid to common schools.

Very respectfully yours,

J. MILTON HALL,
President of the American Institution of Instruction.

The resolution is transmitted in a letter from Hon. E. C. Carrigan, an eminent instructor and educator of New England, in which he speaks of this institution as the oldest organization of its kind, and one of the most influential, if not the most influential, educational association in the country. The directors are all leading educators in New England and in other States. As the bill is before the Senate, I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of Harriette R. Shattuck, president, and other officers and members of the National Woman's Suffrage Association of Massachusetts, praying for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting States from disfranchising citizens on account of sex; which was referred to the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. CALL presented a petition of 130 citizens of the Second Congressional district of Florida, praying for the passage of a bill prohibiting the alcoholic liquor traffic in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PLUMB presented a petition of citizens of Kansas, praying for the submission to the several States of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Kansas, praying for the appointment of a national commission of inquiry in relation to the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. CAMERON presented a resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh, Pa., recommending certain legislation relative to the reduction of the surplus in the national Treasury; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HAWLEY presented the memorial of Rev. S. McCall and 25 others, of Moodus, Conn., remonstrating against the admission of Utah into the Union so long as the local civil power remains in the hands of the Mormon priesthood; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. HAMPTON presented a petition of citizens of South Carolina, praying an appropriation for the improvement of the Congaree River, South Carolina; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 547) for the relief of George W. Bolton, alias Charles Andrews, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 768) for the relief of Orin R. McDaniel, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 969) for the relief of Mrs. Louisa Jackman, and the legal representatives of Mrs. Martha Vaughn, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 300) granting a pension to Miss Juliet G. Howe, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 39) to grant an increase of pension to Frederick Beno, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 303) granting a pension to Mattie Graziani, of Covington, Ky., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 306) granting a pension to John H. Foster, of Newport, Ky., submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of General Lewis Gove Brown, praying to be allowed a pension of $100 a month, submitted an adverse report thereon, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 128) for the relief of sailors and marines in the United States naval homes, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of George Park, praying for a pension, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 1299) granting a pension to George Park; which was read twice by its title.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Cordelia R. Jones, widow of Theodore Jones, late private Company G, Twenty-eighth Illinois Volunteers, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 1300) granting a pension to Cordelia R. Jones; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HAMPTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1063) for the relief of the heirs or legal representative of Robert J. Baugness, deceased, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

GOVERNMENT POSTAL TELEGRAPH.

Mr. SAWYER. I am instructed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred a resolution submitted by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], December 12, 1887, to report it adversely, and recommend its indefinite postponement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee of five Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, be directed to inquire into the advisability and practicability of establishing and maintaining a Government postal telegraph, with power to report by bill or otherwise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the committee will be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution.

Mr. HARRIS. The resolution had better be indefinitely postponed, had it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the recommendation of the committee to be, that it be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution.

Mr. HARRIS. That leaves the resolution pending. It may as well be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee suggests that the resolution reported adversely by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not any objection to that as the present action of the Senate, because all the bills relating to the subject have gone to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; but I should not wish it to be understood as a determination of the Senate for a future session that the propriety of a special inquiry into that business had been decided adversely. With that explanation, I have not the least objection to the resolution being indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the resolution will be indefinitely postponed. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

JACKSON, (MISS.,) MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the suppression of the votes of the colored citizens of Jackson, Miss., at the recent municipal election in that city, and into the alleged participation in such suppression by the United States district attorney and by a deputy collector of internal revenue and a deputy United States marshal; and to report the facts to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over under the rule.

RETURN OF DIRECT TAX.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further concurrent or other resolutions the morning business is closed, and the Chief Clerk will report the first bill on the Calendar.

The bill (S. 139) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861, was announced as first in order upon the Calendar.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] is not well to-day. He has charge of the bill, but I think there will be no objection in the Senate to its passage. A similar bill has passed the Senate several times, and as the Senator from Vermont is not present I will ask that the bill be taken up and disposed of.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to credit to each State and Territory of the United States, and the District of Columbia, a sum equal to all collections made from said States and Territories and the District of Columbia under the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861, and the amendatory acts thereto.

SEC. 2. That all moneys still due to the United States on the quota of direct tax apportioned by section 8 of the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861, are hereby remitted and relinquished.

SEC. 3. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to reimburse each State, Territory, and the District of Columbia for all money found due to them under the provisions of this act; and the Treasurer of the United States is hereby directed to pay the same to the governors of the States and Territories, and to the commissioners of the District of Columbia: Provided, That where the sums, or any part thereof, credited to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, have been collected from the citizens thereof, either directly or by sale of property, such sums shall be held in trust by such State, Territory, or the District of Columbia for the benefit of those of its citizens from whom they were collected, or their legal representatives.

Mr. BERRY. I offer an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 4. That where the sums or any part thereof credited to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia have been collected from the citizens thereof, either directly or by sale of property, such sums so collected from the citizens shall be paid to the governors of the States and Territories and to the commissioners of the District of Columbia, to be held in trust as aforesaid, notwithstanding the State, Territory, or District of Columbia in which such citizens resided at the time of the collection of such tax is indebted to the Government of the United States; and no part of the money herein appropriated for the benefit of citizens from whom such tax was collected shall be withheld by the Treasurer of the United States because of the indebtedness of any State, Territory, or District of Columbia to the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. SHERMAN. This amendment would create very grave embarrassment in the execution of the bill, and I trust the Senator from Arkansas after he hears my statement will withdraw it.

In some cases the direct tax, when levied, was collected from citizens; especially, I believe, in South Carolina; the property was sold. The bill provides that the whole of the money collected in any way, either from citizens or from States, either by voluntary payment or by enforced payment, shall be refunded to the States. As a matter of course, if the money was collected from a citizen the State would then become trustee for the citizen and bound to do what was equitable and right as the custodian of his money. That is sufficiently guarded and protected by the bill as it stands.

The bill has been carefully framed in the Treasury Department. It will be easily executed, as it deals only with the States. The tax was levied upon the States. On the other hand, if the amendment is adopted the Government would become the trustee for a great number of individuals, while the State ought to deal with those individuals. The tax was apportioned among the States, and the State ought to deal with the individual. If in that way injustice has been done to the individual, the State ought to repair that injustice, because it was the neglect or failure of the State which caused the sacrifice of the property of the citizen.

That is all I desire to say. I have no objection to the amendment except what I have stated.

Mr. BERRY. I think the Senator from Ohio misapprehends the effect of the amendment. It is not proposed to make the Government pay this money directly to the parties entitled to it. The amendment allows it to be paid over to the governors of the States, as suggested by the bill, to be held in trust for the individuals to whom it belongs.

The object and purpose of the amendment is to make it absolutely definite and certain that the Treasury officials can not withhold this money, which is due to individuals, on account of the State being indebted to the General Government. It may be argued that it could not be so withheld without the amendment, but the first section of the bill says that the States shall be credited with this money.

The Treasury officials have heretofore withheld money that was due to the States on account of the 5 per cent. fund and on account of indemnity for swamp lands, because the Treasury officials held that this direct tax was a charge against the States. The Supreme Court in a recent case, in the State of Louisiana vs. The United States, decided that it was not a charge against the States, but that it belongs to individuals. The bill recognizes that fact, and the object of my amendment is to prevent the Treasury officials from withholding this money, which goes to individuals, because they claim that a State is indebted to the General Government.

The Government of the United States holds certain bonds of my own State. They are held by the Government. They were held in trust for the Smithsonian Institution and also for certain Indian tribes. The Government has paid the interest on those bonds. While that is true, the State of Arkansas has a claim against the Government in a large amount for the 5 per cent. fund, for indemnity for swamp lands, for indemnity for certain school lands, and other claims, which we are seeking to offset against this claim which the Government holds against the State. We have been trying for years to get a settlement with the officers of the Government. We have tried to pass a bill through Congress authorizing a settlement. We have a bill pending now before the Committee on Public Lands which will settle this matter between the State and the General Government.

All I ask is the adoption of this amendment so as to make it certain that the Government can not withhold this money, which belongs to individuals and does not belong to States, because it is claimed that the State owes the General Government. That is the purpose of the amendment. If the amendment is adopted the money will be paid over to the governors, as proposed by the bill, for it makes no change in that regard whatever. It only makes absolutely certain what the Senator from Ohio says is the intention of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask the Senator from Arkansas if he is aware that his amendment has ever been submitted to the Treasury Department or to any officer of the Government?

Mr. BERRY. No, sir. The amendment was offered by me several days ago, and was ordered to be printed. It has been lying on the table since the bill was reported back. It was never submitted to any one.

Mr. SHERMAN. All I can say is that when we are considering a measure of this kind, involving large considerations, I do not like to be called upon suddenly to pass on such an amendment. If the Senate are willing to adopt it, if they understand it better than I do, very well. I think the bill ought to pass; the bill ought to pass now; and I hope the Senator from Arkansas will allow it to pass, and let the amendment be made in the other House, if possible.

Mr. BERRY. No, sir; I insist on the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. The amendment was never submitted to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BERRY. If the Senator will allow me——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. According to the rule under which the Senate is acting a Senator is entitled to speak but once on any question, and for five minutes. If it is the desire of the Senate to have that rule enforced, the Chair will enforce it. Otherwise the debate will be regarded as continuous at the pleasure of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will take the judgment of the Senate upon the question. The amendment has been read.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I only desire to say that although the Senator from Arkansas submitted his amendment some time before the holiday recess, the Committee on Finance did not meet any more to act upon it. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] has had charge of the bill. As far as the committee could talk about it informally, we thought the amendment was going too far, and, as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] suggested, perhaps holding the Government responsible as trustee for this money, while under our bill, as presented, whatever money was received originally would be paid over direct to the governors of the States, and the individuals could then bring the matter before their governors in the respective States, and such regulations would be made as would do justice among them.

The committee, as I have said, talked about it informally and opposed the amendment, thinking it would be an obstacle in the way of a final settlement and perhaps involve the United States. I know that members of the committee who spoke about it were afraid that the amendment would perhaps have that effect, whereas if the money is paid according to the bill as originally presented it will all go to the States, and legislation at home will regulate the just rights of individuals. There is the place where we thought it should be settled, and not hold either the United States or the Treasury officials responsible, or complicate them by any of these private settlements.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not recognize the Senator from Arkansas under the rule without unanimous consent.

Mr. BERRY. I was going to ask unanimous consent to say a few words.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator from Arkansas proceeding? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BERRY. If the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Ohio will read the amendment they will see that it does not have the effect which they say it has. The only change it makes is that it does not allow the Treasury officials here to withhold the money because a State is claimed to be indebted to the United States. With the original bill, or with the amendment adopted, in either case, the money is paid over to the governor of the States, to be held in trust for the individuals to whom it belongs.

The Senator from Kentucky is mistaken when he says my amendment would make the Government a trustee for the individuals. The bill provides that it shall be paid to the governors of the States, to be held in trust for the individuals, and the only purpose of the amendment is to prevent the Treasury officials here from withholding money which belongs to individuals, because the officials may claim that a State is indebted to the United States. That is the purpose of the amendment. I do not know that the Treasury officials would have any right to withhold it without the amendment. In fact, I think they would not; but if the amendment is adopted it is absolutely certain that they can not withhold it, whereas there would be a plausible reason why they might withhold it if the amendment was not adopted.

As I said, there is one provision of the bill which says the money shall be held in trust. I think the courts would hold that therefore it could not be offset against the debt due from a State; but if that be true, then the amendment can do no injury, because it only makes that certain which it is claimed by the friends of the bill is the effect of the measure as it stands.

Mr. SHERMAN. With the leave of the Senate, I desire to say that upon examining the amendment I find that it makes the State the trustee of the person, and therefore I have no special objection to it. The amendment does not make the United States the trustee. I ask that the amendment be read again, and then, so far as I am concerned, I shall waive any objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read again.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as an additional section to the bill the following:

SEC. 4. That where the sums or any part thereof credited to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia have been collected from the citizens thereof, either directly or by sale of property, such sums so collected from the citizens shall be paid to the governors of the States and Territories and to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, to be held in trust as aforesaid, notwithstanding the State, Territory, or District of Columbia in which such citizens resided at the time of the collection of such tax is indebted to the Government of the United States; and no part of the money herein appropriated for the benefit of citizens from whom such tax was collected shall be withheld by the Treasurer of the United States because of the indebtedness of any State, Territory, or District of Columbia to the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to the amendment unless other Senators have.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I am opposed to both the bill and the amendment. I am opposed to collecting money from the people of the United States and paying it back to the States. I believe myself that every dollar in the public Treasury ought to remain there, and that it should not be distributed, if there is any power in Congress to distribute it back to the States of the Union.

The so-called distribution of the surplus fund in 1836, by general consent, was not a distribution, but a loan to the States, because it was then considered that there was no constitutional power to distribute money out of the Treasury of the United States among the several States.

But this bill proposes to take some $15,000,000 collected from 1861 to 1865 and to return it to the States. In some of the States the amount demanded by the Government was assumed and paid by the States, and in other States the Government of the United States collected it through its own processes out of the people. When you return it to the States it is not paid to the persons. The owners of real estate in the several States from whom the Government collected it paid the money, and this is a distribution of money not to the people of the several States, but to the States. For one I am opposed to it. I am opposed to any depletion of the Treasury in order to keep up the high protective tariff under which we live. Every dollar we fritter away out of the Treasury furnishes an argument for continuing the high taxes now laid upon the people of the country.

If I were to consult my own interest I would favor the bill, because I paid a part of the direct tax, but I am speaking against my individual interest and in favor of what I believe is the interest of the whole country when I say that this money should remain in the Treasury.

I hope the bill will not pass, but my observation here for the last seventeen years has taught me that when there is money connected with a bill, and the people of the States are to be favored by an appropriation from the public Treasury, it seems perfectly useless to interpose objections to it. However, I wish to put myself upon record here as being opposed to this process of distribution of the funds now in the Treasury.

Mr. PLUMB. I think that I have heard only imperfectly the remarks of the Senator from Arkansas, but it seems to me that the last part of his amendment is a rather important provision and one that is not in the line of the general purpose of the bill. Why, for instance, should any transaction of the several States with the General Government which does not relate to the imposition or the collection of this war tax be made the subject of legislation in connection with the bill, unless we have all the facts before us in each particular case?

The State of Arkansas has some deal with the General Government on account of some bonds which the Government bought for the Smithsonian Institution, I think, and which that State heretofore does not seem to have been entirely able to discharge and pay. It has set up some claim against the General Government for swamp lands, etc., of which I say nothing, except that there is a controversy and the State usti fies itself in defaulting on the bonds by reason of the fact that it owns some land which it has not been able to get possession of; and there may be other States in the same predicament. It is entering upon a pretty wide field of investigation to attempt to say now that this money should be paid back, notwithstanding the various claims which have been made. Why should this measure be embarrassed in any way by any suggestion or hint of some deal of that kind existing between the States and the General Government in regard to a subject-matter entirely different?

So far as I am concerned, I do not care whether the bill passes or not. The amount which the State of Kansas will get from it is trifling. What the General Government ought really to do is to disburse the total sum of this money upon the basis of present population. But the committee adopted the other rule, of giving it back to the States exactly as it received it from them.

While the State of Kansas will get nothing of consequence out of it, I have no objection to the passage of the bill; but if it is to be made an omnibus, which is to carry a lot of other things, then I shall object to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. MCPHERSON. In committee I voted for the bill, which was introduced in the Senate by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. I had no knowledge of the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas at that time. It was not before the committee, I believe.

Mr. BERRY. No, sir; it was not.

Mr. MCPHERSON. No consideration was given to it by the committee.

Mr. BECK. No; of course not.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I can not support the amendment, and for the reasons which I shall state.

The loyal Northern States were called upon at a particular time, in a great emergency in the affairs of the Government, to contribute a certain sum of money towards Government support. A direct tax was levied upon the people of those States. It was a tax levied upon the property of the respective States. The Southern States, I believe, did not pay any portion of it, with perhaps one or two exceptions.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The State of South Carolina, I know, did pay some of it, but the circumstances under which that was paid were very peculiar. Lands in the State of South Carolina were sold for the payment of this tax. Those lands were purchased very largely by army and navy purchasers. The lands were afterwards sold, and the money which was paid in by army and navy purchasers has been lost by them. Suppose, for instance, that the money is paid back to the State of South Carolina, in all I think some two hundred and odd thousand dollars, and the amount of money realized from the sale of lands upon which the Army and Navy purchasers had paid something like sixty thousand dollars, and they have lost their land, because the land was afterwards sold by some kind of an understanding between the National Government and the State of South Carolina, their money is lost and the land is lost to them. With this amendment you make the State of South Carolina a trustee of this fund, to be paid back as the equities may appear. I am only raising this as an illustration. That money must needs all remain in the State treasury until the equities are made apparent. It involves litigation which will last for years and years, and in the end the money can never be equitably distributed.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. MCPHERSON. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. There is no difference whatever in regard to the State being made a trustee for the benefit of the individual in the original bill and in the amendment. The objection which the Senator is urging to the amendment applies with equal force to the bill for which he says he voted in committee, because each measure makes the State the trustee for the individual, as was admitted by the Senator from Ohio a few moments ago.

Mr. MCPHERSON. When the State becomes a trustee to the extent the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas provides, then it will require, of course, some machinery to be put into effect by the State to determine the equities.

Now, take the case of my own State. This tax was levied upon the property of the State as other taxes are levied and paid. The property has changed hands. The owners of 1861 are not the owners of to-day. Yet the industry, the profits, the rentals accruing from that property were paid by the then occupants of the property. Now, what would you do? Would you make the State a trustee to the extent of ascertaining who the owner was at that time, who perhaps is dead, whose heirs have perhaps left the State? I submit that it is practically impossible to undertake to distribute this fund in any such way. The only method by which the people can receive the benefit is to pay it into the State treasury and let it be used for the benefit of the people of the entire State, whether they are the same people who paid the tax or not. In no other way can full justice be done.

If you take this money out of the public treasury it then becomes a tax upon the Southern States, who pay no part of it, in the sense that it does upon the people of my State. Any money taken from the Federal Treasury to-day which can be used, which belongs to the people of all the States, is of course a contribution by them, a tax upon them, if you please, if I may so use the term, paying back the money that the loyal States paid in at a time of great national peril and great national trial, it being a requisition made directly upon them, as the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] suggests to me, to meet an emergency——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time is exhausted, and he can proceed only by unanimous consent.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I do not think I shall seek to occupy further time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I desire to be informed by the committee which reported this bill precisely the effect of it. As I understand, a direct tax of $20,000,000 was imposed in 1861, and each State was allowed to assume and pay its share of that $20,000,000 of taxation, if it did so within a certain period; and if it did not, then the machinery of the General Government was put in operation to collect the tax within each State directly from the real estate of the citizens of that State. Most of the States assumed their burden and paid their quota; other States, notably the Southern States, did not assume their burden, and the General Government went on under a system of general tax collection and took the property of individuals and sold it and put the money which was received therefrom into the Treasury of the United States.

Now, the question I wish to have answered is, whether the bill is to credit to each State, not only the money which the State paid from its own treasury into the Treasury of the United States, but is also to pay into the State treasury an amount of money equal to that which the United States collected directly from individuals or by a forcible seizure of their property within the State? As I read the bill, that is its intention. It provides for paying a sum equal to "all collections made from said States and Territories," that is, either from the State or Territory or within the State or Territory.

I understand the conclusion to which the committee have come and the proposition on which the Senate is to vote to be this, that wherever a State neglected or refused to assume the burden of this tax, and the General Government, ignoring the State entirely, taxed the property of individuals and collected from it their proportion of the tax imposed upon the State, the United States will pay into the State treasury the amount of money which was collected from such individuals and tell the persons from whom it was collected to hunt the State for the amount.

It seems to me that it is worthy of consideration whether this Government, after it has reached out its strong arm and taken the money or the property of individuals, and has held the proceeds all these years, and now wishes to give the amount back to them, does its full duty when it turns it over to the treasurer of the State and tells the individuals to hunt the government of the State in order to extract the money from its treasury. It occurs to me that this Government, if it goes into this business of refunding at all, ought to go down into the Southern States and find the tax-payers from whom it collected the money, or their heirs, and give them back their dues, and not turn it over in bulk to the State and leave the individuals to see whether they can extract it from the State treasury.

It may be said that the State can provide the machinery for paying back this money to individuals more readily than the United States can. I do not so understand the case. It seems to me that if there is difficulty in ascertaining to what individuals this money should be refunded, the United States, through the Court of Claims, or through such a tribunal as it may create, is quite as capable of executing this trust for the benefit of the individuals as are the States who have had nothing to do with the collection of the money.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY].

Mr. BERRY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL (when Mr. DOLPH'S name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. DOLPH] is paired.

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. I do not know how he would vote if present.

Mr. REAGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] generally.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CALL. My colleague [Mr. PASCO] is paired with some one, I do not know whom. He is absent, however necessarily.

Mr. SPOONER (after having voted in the negative). I inquire whether the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL] has voted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi has not voted.

Mr. SPOONER. I am paired generally with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL] but I do not know how he would vote on this question. I should vote "nay" if at liberty to do so.

Mr. GEORGE. My colleague, [Mr. WALTHALL] is detained from the Senate by illness.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON].

The result was announced—yeas 14, nays 37; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, the bill proposes, as I understand it, to take from the Treasury of the United States $15,000,000. A portion of this money was collected from the several States and a large portion of it collected directly from individuals. The bill says that so much of it as was collected from individuals shall be paid over to the authorities of the States to be held by them in trust for those individuals.

I offered an amendment which said that the General Government should not withhold this money which belonged to those individuals because the State owed money to the General Government. The Senate voted down that amendment. The bill as it now stands and the vote of the Senate on that amendment propose where the United States has a claim against a State to offset that claim against the claims that individuals have against the General Government. Wherever the officers of the Treasury think that any State is indebted to the General Government, under this bill the money which does not belong to the State but to individuals can be withheld because of the fact that that State is claimed to be indebted to the General Government.

The Senator from Kansas referred to a debt said to be due by the State of Arkansas; and it would be inferred by his remarks that the State of Arkansas desired a recognition of her claim. The amendment simply said that this money due to individuals should not be withheld because this Government claims that Arkansas is indebted to her.

I stated in the former remarks I made that the General Government did have a claim against Arkansas. Arkansas also has a large claim against the General Government, growing out of the 5 per cent. fund, growing out of the indemnity for swamp lands, and growing out of other claims to indemnity for other lands. So it is proposed to offset one against the other. But I can see no justice whatever in taking $15,000,000 that the bill says is due to individuals and saying that the Treasury officers may withhold that fund—not that which belongs to the States, but may withhold that which belongs to individuals in the States. As was said by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], if it belongs to these individuals, it belongs to them; and by what rule of equity, I would ask, would this great Government withhold money belonging to an individual because it claimed that the State in which the individual lived is indebted to the General Government?

Therefore, Mr. President, with the amendment voted down, I for one do not think the bill is just, and I hope that it may not pass.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, only one word. The whole theory of the bill presented by the Finance Committee was based on the fact that all direct taxes must be uniform throughout the United States. The tax was levied on the States, and the States received a rebate of 15 per cent. of the amount because they did pay it within the time limited, and the table in my hand, which I will ask to make part of the RECORD, shows the fact. Many of the Southern States paid a part, some paid very little, and some paid a good deal. Arkansas' portion was $261,000, and she has paid $184,000, so that there is only $77,000 remaining, and I hope the Government will be just enough to pay that to the men who advanced it.

Mr. BERRY. Allow me to interrupt the Senator. The Senator says that he hopes the Government will be willing to pay it to the men who paid that tax. If you will allow it to go to the governor of Arkansas, the individuals will get it; but you voted down the amendment which prohibited this Government from holding that here, not because the individuals were indebted to the Government, but because the State in which they lived was indebted to the General Government. You say the United States should hold that money. If you allow it to go to the governor of the State of Arkansas, you need have no fear but that the individuals to whom it belongs will get it.

Mr. BECK. One hundred and eighty-four thousand dollars out of the $2 ,1,000 will go to the governor of Arkansas. The statement which I submit, to be made part of the RECORD, shows how fair this bill is. All is refunded to the States that did pay, because there is no uniformity unless this is done. It was thought improper and impolitic at this late day to separate the money paid by individuals in the Southern States, and therefore in order to secure justice among all the States, all that was left was to pay the money back to those States which did pay the Government the amount they actually paid, allowing the 15 per cent. of course.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,

On the 4th of February, 1887, when this bill was up before and very fully discussed, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] having charge of it then, as will be seen in volume 18, part 2, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Forty-ninth Congress, second session, page 1340, presented a very full report signed by Hon. Charles J. Folger, when Secretary of the Treasury, on which the bill was based, which report I shall ask to have put into the RECORD, so that it may be seen by the country and by the other House, if the bill goes there. After full discussion then on the exact bill as now framed, the only amendment put on the bill as originally reported being an amendment offered by myself to pay the money to the governors of the respective States and Territories and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, so as to avoid all question of agents and private individuals setting up rights, on the call of the yeas and nays the bill was passed by a vote of 53 to 1. The honorable Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Van Wyck] voted in the negative, when every other Senator present, 53, as recorded on page 1546, voted for the passage of the bill.

That is all I have to say.

LETTER OF SECRETARY FOLGER.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 14, 1884.

SIR: I have the honor of acknowledging the receipt from you of H. R. bill No. 110, entitled "A bill to adjust certain accounts between the United States and the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia."

This bill relates to the direct tax of $20,000,000 annually laid upon the United States, and apportioned to the States, the Territories, and the District of Columbia, under the act of Congress passed August 5, 1861 (12 Stat. at Large, page 294). The purpose of the bill is to relieve and discharge from further liability for that tax those States and Territories which have not paid the portion thereof apportioned to them respectively; and to repay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to those States and Territories which have paid any portion the sums by them respectively paid. Though by the act above cited this tax was made an annual one, an attempt to collect it for more than one year has never been made. By that attempt there were collected about $15,000,000, principally from the States which did not seek to go out of the Union, and there were left uncollected about $5,000,000, principally in the States which did seek to go out of the Union. The sum uncollected remains a charge against those States, and for the purpose of this letter it may be assumed that it is a valid and enforceable charge. It is plain, however, that no legislator at this day would propose to raise revenue by a tax of that kind. There is no need of resorting to such method.

The revenues of the Government, from sources not so extraordinary, and collectible by means and appliances not so objectionable as those involved therein, are ample for its purposes. They are, indeed, superabundant, and the concern of statesmen is rather how they may be reduced than how they may be increased. The Government, then, needs not the money to be got by enforcing this tax. At the same time it is plain that to enforce it would put a grievous burden upon the people of the States which are in default in payment. It needs no array of facts to show this. Congress in one if not both branches has this session considered the proposition of large pecuniary aid to these people to help them place and keep up common schools, and the Senate has passed a bill therefor. If there be need for that succor, there would be harm in enforcing this charge. It is to be considered, too, that while taxes are seldom looked upon with favor, this would be specially objectionable. The purpose for which it was laid can but be remembered with distaste. It can scarcely be expected that there would be cheerful aid from the State authorities in the enforcement of it. It may be doubted whether there would be any. Indeed, it would, without further legislation, have to be enforced by the machinery provided by the act under which it was laid. This would call for the appointment of numerous Federal officials who would go among the people as obnoxious exactors. I think it must be conceded that there is, and ever will be, great reluctance to ever setting about the collection of this tax. That it never had great favor is shown by the fact that it was never put in force but one year. In practical effect, then, the law for it is obsolete. Why, then, should there remain this unenforced liability, a menace to the people, the enforcement of which is called for by no public need nor by any public opinion?

In my judgment the people and the property of the States in default should be relieved and discharged from it.

But to give such relief and discharge would be to put an inequality of burden upon the States which paid unless they in turn were in some way relieved. This the bill proposes to do by repaying to them the sums received from them. Assuming that the tax was lawful, and the collection as far as made was warranted, this, apart from the circumstances, would be a proposition to donate to the States surplus moneys of the United States, a proposition which I should not favor. But as connected with the proposition to discharge from onerous and needless liability one portion of the people, it takes on a different character; it is presented as an adjustment between different bodies of the people, and is worthy of acceptation. Indeed, it would be unjust to the people of the loyal States to release the people of the once insurrectionary States from their liability without refunding to the former the sums paid by them, and there are analogies in the legislation of Congress.

Acts have been passed refunding to States moneys raised by them for the raising, arming, and equipping of troops for the Army of the United States in the civil war, and for making other refunds of like character. The purpose of laying this direct tax was to aid in the ultimate payment of the extraordinary expenses of the Government caused by the civil war. The raising, arming, and equipping of troops by the States served to keep down those expenses for the time. It was a voluntary act upon the part of the States. There is no violation of principle or fundamental law in repaying to the States from the funds of the United States the cost thereof. The purpose and effect of this bill is not so unlike in nature to that as not also to be freed from the objections to a bald distribution among the States of what are called the surplus revenues of the United States.

Under the peculiar facts of the case, and as it is not likely to become a precedent for other disposals of Federal moneys, my judgment is that the proposed measure is a good one. It is true that exactly equal justice can not be done in carrying out the proposition of the bill. Thus, in some of the Southern States, the tax was to some extent enforced. Tax sales were made of pieces of real estate, in instances, for less than the value of them. Only the surplus of purchase-money over the tax and charges has been available to the owners, and they have lost the difference between that and the total of the purchase-money and between the purchase-money and the real value. On the other hand, in most, if not all, of the Northern States the payment to the United States of the tax was assumed by the State government, which collected the amount of its own people in its own tax levy. Of course, in the changes of citizenship and of ownership of taxable property, while a repayment into the State treasury will tend to reduce the amount of State tax, it will not inure to the benefit of some of those who, in 1861, were tax-payers. But these failures of full and general compensation in dealing with transactions so long past must ensue, and are not to be potentially urged against proposed measures which, in the main, do work equal benefits.

I also inclose herewith a communication to me from the First Comptroller of the Treasury, which presents views in accord with some of those expressed by me, and gives tables of value, and a draught of a bill; and to this communication I ask attention.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. J. FOLGER, Secretary.

Hon. A. J. WARNER,
Chairman Subcommittee of Committee on Claims,
House of Representatives.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to say in that connection that I voted for the bill at that time without having fully considered the subject; but I am satisfied on reflection that there is no power in Congress properly and constitutionally to take money out of the public Treasury, from whatever source it may have come to the public Treasury, and distribute it for any purpose among the several States of this Union. Being satisfied that it is my duty not to vote for a measure violative of the Constitution, I have deemed it proper now, when the bill comes up a second time, to record my vote against it.

Mr. President, it is proposed to release to the several States any portion of the tax imposed upon them which has not been paid. Some States have paid in full. I believe some of the Northern States have not paid in full all the tax imposed upon them. You propose to remit that part which they have not paid, while other States have paid their full quota under the act of 1861. My State paid its quota. It was collected by the Federal Government from the property owners in the State, because, in the judgment of the State, that was the better mode. The tax might have been assumed by the State and collected by it from the people, and the money so raised paid into the Treasury; but every dollar of it was collected by Federal agents.

I have made my objection to the bill. When I voted for it before, I had not considered the subject. Since then I have looked into the question as to the right of the Government to distribute money from the Treasury amongst the States for any purpose. I deny it; and therefore I wish to record my vote against the passage of the bill.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, if my recollection is correct as to the manner in which the money now sought to be refunded by this bill came into the Federal Treasury, it was by means of a requisition made by the Federal Government upon the States for a quota of the direct tax apportioned among the States according to population, in obedience to the constitutional requirement in that behalf. The States were dealt with as States, the State governments in some cases paying the quota required out of the money then in their treasuries and in others providing the machinery to collect the tax in their own way. Its burdens were apportioned upon the people of the several States so as to suit the convenience of those people as it appeared to the Legislatures of the several States.

Now, having dealt with the States, having received the money on a requisition directly made upon the States, it seems to me that the Federal Government, in seeking to return this tax which it is now able to to return, and which it is equitable should be returned to the States, should restore it through the channel and to the source through which and from which it came. So it seems to me that it would be entirely consonant with the manner in which the tax was received by the Federal Government that we should deal directly with the States, restore their respective quotas to the treasuries of the States, and leave it with the States to deal with the money as a fund as shall seem best to them, just as it was left to the States to collect the tax in the manner that seemed advisable to them.

We certainly can trust the States to deal with their own people, the governments of the States being directly responsible and much closer to the people than the Federal Government can be. I therefore shall move that this bill be amended by striking out all after the word "Columbia" in line 8 of section 3.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No amendment is now in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An amendment is not now permissible.

Mr. GRAY. I do not understand the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is not now open to amendment, having passed to its third reading.

Mr. GRAY. Then I give notice that at the proper stage I will offer that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The stage of amendment has been passed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The only way the Senator can reach that is to move to reconsider the vote by which the third reading was ordered; and that being reconsidered he can then move his amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I hope that will be done by unanimous consent. No Senator certainly wants to cut off the opportunity to amend the bill.

Mr. GRAY. I ask unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware asks unanimous consent that the action of the Senate by which the bill was ordered to a third reading may be reconsidered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that will be regarded as ordered.

Mr. GRAY. I now offer the amendment, in section 3, line 8, after the word "Columbia," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That where the sums, or any part thereof, credited to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia have been collected from the citizens thereof, either directly or by sale of property, such sums shall be held in trust by such State, Territory, or the District of Columbia for the benefit of those of its citizens from whom they were collected, or their legal representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. SHERMAN. Lest it might be taken as conceded, I beg leave to call the attention of the Senate for a moment to the importance of this declaration.

If this money is paid to the States there will be an implied trust that the State shall hold it for the benefit of the persons who originally paid the money. If there would necessarily be an implied trust, would it not be better to make it specifically an expressed trust, so that any person may appeal to the proper tribunal, if the State gets the money back and the State becomes a trustee for him?

The statement was made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] that perhaps the duty of the Government was to follow this money back to the persons who paid it; but if he had studied this question as much as I have, he would have found that there are thousands of people who paid this tax dead, many probably without heirs. There is no doubt that any State intrusted with this money, receiving it as a trust on an expressly declared condition, would undertake to reimburse its own citizens for this tax so far as it could.

The bill was carefully prepared with that view, to pay the money to the State, making the State the trustee; so that any person who claimed the money as the cestui que trust would have a right to appeal to the courts. There were only two States, I think, where such claimants exist, one Arkansas, and the other South Carolina. In South Carolina more money was collected than the tax. How that came about I do not know, but the result was that there is a balance now due to the State of South Carolina. As I understand, they have already made some provision for this excess. At all events, if this money is paid to South Carolina, the amount that was paid in excess of the amount really apportioned to them would be received by them as a trust fund to be dealt with by them, and if they did not deal according to justice and equity, of course there should be some mode of appealing to the courts, although that probably might be difficult. At all events, the bill declares an express trust in favor of the persons who paid the money. The bill has been carefully prepared at the Treasury Department. I have the report of the First Comptroller on the subject before me, together with a communication of all these claims. I have also the recommendation of Mr. Folger when Secretary of the Treasury, with a statement of the account with all the States. This bill was prepared at the Treasury Department, no doubt by the First Comptroller, who stated the account.

In some of the States the tax was partially collected by an assessment on lands, as in Arkansas and South Carolina, but most of the Southern States never paid any portion of it. North Carolina, I think, paid a part of it, and perhaps other States paid a part of it. I trust the amendment proposed will not be adopted nem. con., but, on the other hand, that the express declaration of trust will be left to stand.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I appreciate entirely, I think, the desire of the Senator from Ohio to accomplish the restoration of these taxes to the very pockets out of which they came; but I think it was shown by the Senator from New Hampshire very clearly that after the lapse of twenty-odd years it will be a matter of impossibility to track and find out the executors and the heirs of the men and the women who paid these taxes, and restore to them or divide among the heirs in proper proportion their share of what was paid by their testators or intestates. Therefore, I think that the striking out of this proviso will leave the fund unincumbered in the treasuries of the States, and will relieve the States from an awkward and inconvenient trust that will hamper them, and perhaps keep this fund lying idle in their treasuries for all time.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GRAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HARRIS. If any one or more of the citizens of a State, by any process, paid a proportion of this direct tax into the Treasury of the United States, is it his purpose to return that money to the State in which the citizens lived, free of all trust and all right of the person who paid the tax to receive his money?

Mr. GRAY. Oh, no. Mr. President, I have no purpose to accomplish anything that would be so inequitable as that. I only say that if we impose this on this fund it will be in a condition that will keep the fund in the State treasury perhaps for an indefinite number of years. I am willing that the States should have the largest liberty in dealing with it; and their responsibility to their own citizens and to those from whom this money was taken will sit quite as heavily on the conscience of those who control the organism of the State as it can possibly be incumbent on the authorities of the United States. It may be a convenient thing, where it is impossible to follow out and ascertain who were the parties who paid all this money, that this fund should be in such a condition that it may be used for some purpose in which the State and its people have a general interest. If they can relieve taxation, if they can increase their school fund with that part of these moneys that they are not able to restore to the original tax-payers, the people of the State may get the benefit of the refunding in that way. I do not want the fund hampered by an inconvenient and awkward condition that may prevent its realization if the bill is passed in the shape in which it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the amendment be again read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware moves to strike out the proviso in the third section, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 8, after the word "Columbia," it is proposed to strike out:

Provided, That where the sums, or any part thereof, credited to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia have been collected from the citizens thereof, either directly or by sale of property, such sums shall be held in trust by such State, Territory, or the District of Columbia for the benefit of those of its citizens from whom they were collected, or their legal representatives.

Mr. CHANDLER. It seems to me that it would be only an aggravation of the evil which I conceive to lurk in this bill to proceed—on account of the inconveniences which would be found in returning this money to the individuals or the heirs of individuals from whom the United States took it—to enact that their rights shall be confiscated for the benefit of the State in which they happened to live. I believe that I have studied this subject as much in time past as has the honorable Senator from Ohio. I find that the provisions for the direct tax, which was imposed in 1861, begin with section 8 of the act of August 5, 1861, entitled "An act to provide increased revenue from imports, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes." The eighth section is as follows:

That a direct tax of $20,000,000 be, and is hereby, annually laid upon the United States, and the same shall be, and is hereby, apportioned to the States, respectively, in manner following.

Then follows the apportionment to each State, as required by the Constitution, which provides how direct taxes shall be apportioned among the States. The next section, section 9, provides—

That for the purpose of assessing the above tax and collecting the same, the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to divide, respectively, the States and Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia into convenient collection districts, and to nominate and, by and with the advice of the Senate, to appoint an assessor and a collector for each such district.

Then follow sections 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, and so on, nearly ten pages of the statute-book, containing provisions for the collection of this tax directly from the property of the individual, and not until section 53 is the provision to be found—

That any State or Territory and the District of Columbia may lawfully assume, assess, collect, and pay into the Treasury of the United States the direct tax, or its quota thereof, imposed by this act.

It is clear from the act that the provision that the States might pay the tax was only an incidental and ultimate provision, while the act, to begin with, sets up a complete system of internal-revenue machinery for the purpose of collecting the tax directly from the property of individuals. Where a State assumed and paid the tax, the money should undoubtedly be refunded to the State; but where the State did nothing about the tax and had nothing to do with it, but the General Government went on and collected it from individuals by seizing and selling their lands, and now in order to equalize this burden among all the United States the tax is to be refunded, it is gravely proposed to take the money that was collected under this machinery from each individual and transmit it to the State where he happened to live and tell him to go to the State treasury and call for it. Mr. President, it would be equally as just if we had collected from individuals ordinary internal-revenue taxes for the last twenty-five years which ought not to have been exacted, and had decided that we would return the amounts which we had collected, to send those amounts to the treasury of the State where the parties live and tell them to go to that State treasury to make their claims!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator will be allowed to go on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont suggests that the Senator from New Hampshire be allowed to proceed, notwithstanding the rule. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to say only one thing further. The Senator from Ohio has spoken of the difficulty of refunding this money because these claims are more than twenty years old. If we choose to refund it we can find through the machinery of the Federal Government, through the Court of Claims, or through some other tribunal, the men from whom these taxes were collected, and if they are dead we can find their heirs quite as easily and as expeditiously as the States can find them, and quite as easily and expeditiously as we can find the claimants for damages by the French spoliations.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question? In the event that his suggestion shall be adopted, and the Federal Government shall fail to find the heirs or representatives of the persons who paid this money, then that residue would be left in the Treasury of the United States, would it not? Is it not better, if it is to be refunded at all, that it shall go to the State in which the people who paid the money resided at the time of payment?

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I can not conceive of any such State right as that; under which, if the General Government collected the tax of an individual and found that it had collected it unjustly and wanted to refund it to him, it should hand it over to the State in which he happened to live!

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, before the vote is taken on this amendment proposing to strike out, and for fear that a vote not to strike out may operate as declaring that the words shall stand as they are in the bill, I move to amend the paragraph proposed to be stricken out by inserting, in line 11 of section 3, after the word "collected," the first part of the word being on the preceding line, the words "by the United States;" so that it will read: "have been collected by the United States from the citizens thereof."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. EDMUNDS. My motive for the amendment is to make it perfectly clear and literally correct, that the money which we propose the State shall hold in trust is that which has been collected directly by the power of the United States from her citizens or inhabitants, for all of this money was collected from the inhabitants of the States and got into the Treasury by collecting it from their inhabitants. Therefore, in order to guard against any possible misconstruction (which it is much easier to do in passing a law than it is afterwards in the courts), I make that motion. If that is agreed to, I shall move to put in the word "inhabitants" after "citizens" where it occurs, so that mere citizenship of the State as distinguished from inhabitancy shall not be the only test. If a man happens to be a citizen of another State or an alien and resided in that State, and was called upon in respect of his property or otherwise to pay, if we refund at all it ought to be refunded to him as well as to the man who was a citizen of the State.

Mr. GRAY. I will accept the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment offered by myself. I think it is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question must be decided by the Senate.

Mr. GRAY. I beg pardon. My motion was to strike out.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My motion is to perfect the paragraph before the vote is taken on the motion to strike out, so that if the paragraph stands it will have these words in.

Mr. GRAY. Very well.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the proviso proposed to be stricken out, in line 11, section 3, after the word "collected," it is moved to insert the words "by the United States;" so as to read:

That where the sums or any part thereof credited to any State, Territory, or District of Columbia, have been collected by the United States from the citizens thereof, etc.

Mr. GRAY. I withdraw the amendment offered by me so that the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont, modifying the proviso, may be adopted.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If I understand the effect of the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, it is that where the Government of the United States itself has collected the money the State government shall hold it in trust for the individuals from whom it was collected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the fact, because as it reads now literally—I do not say that a court would so hold, but there would be some danger of it—every part of this money which a State like Vermont paid out of its own treasury had been raised by taxation and collected from its citizens. Now it will be for the State, as that was got by a general and just tax under the laws of Vermont, it will be for the State Legislature itself to say what it will do with this money when it comes. It does not make any difference whether it pays it back to the citizens who probably were all taxed on an equality, or whether it is used for purposes for which they would otherwise have to be taxed. My point is simply to provide a trust for the persons who directly through the intervention of the Government of the United States were compelled to pay this money.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator from Vermont will pardon me, that was exactly the state of things that occurred in South Carolina. As he will remember, the citizens of certain counties paid the entire tax, which was very inequitable and unfair and unjust. I have been trying to get reimbursement for the citizens who paid that tax because of the jurisdiction of the United States Government over them. It is eminently proper that that fund should be held in trust to reimburse the people who paid the tax.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am only trying to make it perfectly clear that it applies to them and not to the general tax-payer, as in Vermont, who according to his property supplied the treasury, and the State itself paid it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I see no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, because it only makes clear what is the intention now.

Mr. HARRIS. It simply makes clear what the bill as it stands evidently means.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope it will be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I move to amend, on the same theory, in line 11 of section 3, by inserting, after the word "citizens," the words "or inhabitants;" so as to read, in describing the money, as having been collected "by the United States from the citizens or inhabitants thereof." I do not see the justice of making the test of citizenship on the question of a man having been compelled to pay this money. I take it the amendment will not be objected to by anybody.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In line 14 of the same section, after the word "citizens," I move to insert "or inhabitants."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I move to further amend the proviso by adding to it these words:

All claims under the trust hereby created shall be filed with the governor of each State or Territory or the commissioners of the District of Columbia, respectively, within six years next after the passage of this act; and all claims not so filed shall be forever barred, and the money attributable thereto shall belong to such State, Territory, or District of Columbia, respectively, as the case may be.

The point of this is to meet the objection—and there is force in it—of the interminable difficulty of having the State forever made trustee without any power herself in honor to wind it up. Therefore I propose that all claimants to this fund shall within six years make themselves known by filing their claims with the chief officer of the State or Territory or District, and if they do not, all the money that would have belonged to them shall belong to the general treasury, and so wind up the trust.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of Mr. EDMUNDS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I trust the Senator from Vermont will not undertake to fix a statute of limitations here, and a limitation on a trust. I have no great objection to that if it is deemed important; but when we are paying back this money to the States it seems to me we ought to leave to them the regulation of the mode and manner of the distribution of the trust, assuming, as a matter of course, that they have the same interest to protect the rights and obligations due to their own citizens as we have.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should entirely agree with my friend from Ohio if the States had the power to do that thing; but, as I understand the law of trusts, the trustee has no power, of his own motion, to wind up and terminate the trust or fix any statute of limitations at all; and therefore it was to provide by act of Congress, the only power creating the trust, for determining how it shall be terminated and wound up. I propose to provide that it shall be wound up as to claimants who do not file their claims with the governor within six years. If I thought, as the Senator appears to consider, that the States would have power to make a provision of that kind, this amendment would not be necessary, but I think they have not.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont or the Senator from Ohio, who have endeavored to perfect this provision declaring a trust in behalf of the citizens and inhabitants of the several States, what provision they wish to make for those persons who were not citizens or inhabitants, but non-residents, owning property within the State or Territory or District, and whose real estate was sold by the tax-gatherers of the United States in order to enforce the collection of the tax.

By section 13 of the act of 1861 it is provided—

That the said direct tax laid by this act shall be assessed and laid on the value of all lands and lots of ground, with their improvements and dwelling-houses.

The United States have collected this money off the property, and it seems that we are asked to declare a trust in favor of citizens and of inhabitants of the State where the collection was made; but it occurs to me to say that if a citizen of Vermont or New Hampshire owned any of the sea islands of South Carolina, and his property was taken away from him to pay this tax, and the General Government has concluded to refund it to the State and declare a trust in the State, it should declare it in favor of the owners of the land and not of the citizens or inhabitants of the State. It seems to me that the bill is not sufficiently perfected in that regard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business of yesterday, being the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to suggest an amendment to the pending bill, which I have no doubt will be accepted. I will move to add in line 11 of section 3, after the word "thereof," the words "or any other person;" and in the thirteenth and fourteenth lines, to strike out the words "of its citizens" and insert instead thereof the word "persons;" so as to read:

Have been collected by the United States from the citizens thereof or any other person, either directly or by sale of property, such sums shall be held in trust by such State, Territory, or the District of Columbia for the benefit of those persons from whom they were collected or their legal representatives.

I think that will remove the difficulty of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON] is entitled to the floor on the unfinished business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before the Senator proceeds, I hope there may be an order that the two last amendments may be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, if there be no objection.

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. Mr. President, a distinguished citizen of Pennsylvania, a member of the Federal convention which framed our present Constitution, after an observation for twenty-five years of its practical operation, used this deeply significant language:

But, after all, what does it signify that men should have a written constitution, containing unequivocal provisions and limitations? The legislative lion will not be entangled in the meshes of a logical net. The legislature will always make the power which it wishes to exercise, unless it be so organized as to contain within itself the sufficient check. Attempts to restrain it from outrage by other means will only render it more outrageous. The idea of binding legislators by oaths is puerile. Having sworn to exercise the powers granted according to their true intent and meaning, they will, when they feel a desire to go further, avoid the shame, if not the guilt, of perjury, by swearing the true intent and meaning to be, according to their comprehension, that which suits their purpose.

Sir, I would not presume to make any personal application of these burning words to any legislator or legislators in this high presence; but at least they are profoundly suggestive of the little force and effect due to legislative precedents, when passed, as they often are, under the promptings of controlling interests or of intense political passions. And I will venture to go one step further in the practical application of these gloomy views of Gouverneur Morris, and declare that in my humble opinion no debate which has ever occurred in the United States Senate, apart from the turbulent times of war or of reconstruction, have more clearly illustrated the weakness of paper constitutions or the remorseless power of construction when invoked by partisan passion, by a seeming public necessity, or by sectional greed, than those which the measure now before us has again and again provoked in this hall.

Mr. President, that man would seem to be an extreme latitudinarian, incapable of being reasoned with on such subjects, who would deny that this is a government of limited powers, which would have never been formed at all unless its framers and the people who adopted it had understood such to be its nature. It would further seem that any man must shut his eyes to light and knowledge who does not know that every debate in the Federal convention of 1787, every debate in every State convention upon the adoption of our Constitution, every decision in our Supreme Court upon the extent of the powers thereby granted, and a solemn amendment to that instrument, adopted by the very people who framed it to prevent any misconstruction, show beyond the possibility of a mistake that this Government has no powers besides those expressed in that instrument and such implied powers as are necessary and proper to carry out those especially granted.

The Supreme Court, which can alone authoritatively interpret the Constitution, has declared that instrument to be distinctively one for "the enumeration and not for the definition" of the powers granted. It has further told us "that in all its provisions the Constitution looks to an indestructible Union, composed of indestructible States." It has emphatically decided "that the General Government and the States are separate and distinct sovereignties, acting separately and independently of each other within their respective spheres. The former in its appropriate sphere is supreme; but the States, within the limits of the powers not granted, are as independent of the General Government as that Government, within its sphere, is independent of the States." But how, I ask, can the Constitution be distinctively an instrument for the enumeration of granted powers, if, in addition, the General Government holds a vast mass of undefined and undefinable powers under the so-called "general welfare" clause? And how could its framers have intended the States to be indestructible if through the words "to provide for the general-welfare" they gave to the General Government a great corrosive power which could at its pleasure eat into and consume the very vitals of State rights and interests? How could they have imagined they were creating State sovereignties as independent in their spheres as the General Government within its sphere whilst they were arming that General Government with the right to break down all barriers and absorb all subjects of legislation which it should deem to involve the general welfare?

And yet, sir, in spite of every difficulty and obstacle in the way of their construction, whether presented by historical evidence, by judicial decisions, or by illogical results, Senators have gravely argued in debates upon this bill that because all republican government is founded upon the intelligence of the people, this Government has "the right to educate every child within the national jurisdiction." This position a learned Senator has taken, though he knows and acknowledges that there is not the slightest hint in the Constitution of an intention to grant this Government any such power; though he knows that from 1789 down to the moment when an inspiration fell upon him to introduce this bill, the subject of education in the States was everywhere, at all times, and among all our people, understood to be peculiarly within the province of the States, and that an attempt even now on the part of Congress to usurp the right to go into New Hampshire and take charge of her public schools would be more than likely to provoke a rebellion among her hardy sons; and although he knows that under colonial or State governments that degree of intelligence and virtue was developed which sufficed to frame and adopt those State and Federal institutions which have been the bulwark of our greatness and the admiration of the world; and that our forefathers had, therefore, no just ground for the belief that it was necessary or expedient to commit to Federal power what local institutions had so happily been able to evolve.

It is hard, therefore, to conceive how any fair-minded man, unwarped by partisan prejudice or by a blinding, sentimental philanthropy, can for a moment conclude that the framers of that Constitution ever intended to repose the care of public education in the General Government. And if they did not, we fail to understand that political morality which would misinterpret that instrument against the intentions of its framers. Can such a result be reached but by assuming, to use the language of Gouverneur Morris, "the true intent and meaning of the Constitution to be that which suits their purpose?"

Another able and prominent Senator, sir, laughing at all labored attempts to reach the true meaning of the Constitution by well-known rules of construction, aided by all the possible lights of historical evidence, has declared the true method of construction to be that "of the practical statesman, who recognizes that in the changing processes of a nation's life the application of preconceived theories and ideas is impracticable, and that he is wisest who adapts himself to measures that are momentarily fitting," and that the true principle is "to so interpret the Constitution as to render effectual the will of a majority of the people." It requires no argument to demonstrate that this would be a virtual blotting out of the Constitution, and the inauguration in its stead of a pure and simple Congressional Government, more imperial even than the Parliament of Great Britain itself.

Leading Senators on the other side of this Chamber, sir, have further expressed the view that Congress is not only empowered to appropriate money raised by taxation to public schools within the States, but also "to direct where it shall go and how it shall be expended." To direct how it shall be expended in the States can only mean to enact legislative provisions regulating and controlling State systems of education. If Congress has the constitutional right to do this in one single respect, it has the right to do it in all. Congress has no half-way, emasculated powers. If we have the right, in providing for the public welfare, to take one step in controlling a State with respect to its school system, we not only have the right from beginning to end, but à fortiori, acting under a full constitutional power over the subject-matter, we have the right to assume complete and independent management of education within the State, and to establish an entire Federal system to the exclusion of all State interference. Such is the canker lurking in this system of construction, which would be found sooner or later to consume every vital right and power reserved to the States.

Mr. President, it is to me a source of supreme wonder how any man, in the light of our constitutional history and in full view of the structure of the Constitution itself, can come to the conclusion that these famous words, "to provide for the general welfare," can be considered as indefinitely amplifying the powers of Congress. In all the debates in the conventions, Federal and State, in which that instrument was discussed, I have found nothing to justify and everything to repel such a construction. In the State conventions, its enemies, it is true, opposed it upon the ground that the consolidationists might use these words as a short road to the engrossment of all power. Its friends—men who were members of the Federal convention—indignantly repelled the idea that the words in question were intended to be thus used or could be tortured into any such destructive meaning. If such could have been the purpose of the framers of the Constitution, then, instead of being the wise, sagacious men whom we have ever delighted to honor, they would have been the veriest bunglers who ever strove to construct an organic law. They labored arduously to build a symmetrical government, clothed with a few enumerated powers, such as the good of the whole country required to be reposed in its central organ, with the great mass reserved to the States; but, after all, they only succeeded in building a house of cards, which the first breath of Congressional construction, lodged in that central government, could blow to tatters. From such a perversion of the facts of history and of the plain deductions of reason we turn away with dread, humbly hoping that the American people will never accept a construction of their fundamental law so destructive and revolutionizing.

Mr. President, alarmed at the ruinous consequences sure to flow from these extreme theories, many members of this body, some on the other side of the Chamber, but the most of them on this, hold to the doctrine that Congress has the power, derived from the taxing clause, to levy taxes and to appropriate the money thus raised towards sustaining public schools in the States, but it is utterly powerless in any manner to shape, direct, or control such systems of education. This theory is sought to be maintained under the same so-called "general-welfare clause," and under various precedents furnished by acts of Congress, the rule appearing to be that when Congress has passed a law appropriating money for which no other authority can be found in the Constitution, and which is of such a character that it can not be reviewed by the Supreme Court, to refer it to this india-rubber clause, and then to use it as a precedent for any other exercise of power which Congress chooses to assume.

Mr. President, looking at this question in an à priori point of view, it would seem very strange to say that a government can tax its people and appropriate money thus raised to purposes not only outside of its own sphere of jurisdiction but also conceded to be entirely within the spheres of separate and independent sovereignties. The vesting of such a truncated power in Congress is in contravention of the well-known political maxim, familiar to the framers of the Constitution, "that every power ought to be commensurate with its object."

From the same à priori point of view, it would seem even more unreasonable that a government of enumerated and limited powers, so all along declared to be by statesmen and judges of the John Marshall school, who were anything but strict constructionists, should be clothed with the tremendous power of taxing the people for purposes as far beyond those specified powers as the discretion of Congress can carry them, and (looking at some of the precedents quoted by the supporters of this theory) for purposes as broad as the globe and as wide as humanity itself. It is almost inconceivable that our forefathers, sensitively jealous as they were of a great overshadowing, central government, and filled with that grand and now growing idea of home rule as the great conservator of liberty and the most effectual check upon central absolutism, whilst carefully enumerating the special powers granted to the General Government, should have committed the fatal mistake of granting to Congress an unlimited power of taxation, not only for the purposes for which that government was formed, but for all purposes for which Congress, in its alleged omnipotence as to this most vital of all its functions, might choose to exercise it.

The à priori improbability of such an intention on the part of the founders of our Government becomes vastly greater when we reflect that they were wise and practical statesmen, who ever had before their eyes the fact that their ancestors had fought their most memorable contests for liberty over this very question of arbitrary and unlimited taxation, and were themselves greatly exercised, as the debates in their conventions will show, lest like evils and dangers should afflict their country in its coming history. Sir, it seems to me it would almost amount to a charge of self-stultification against the framers of our Constitution to suppose that the very men who a few years before absolutely refused to grant to the confederate Government the least shadow of authority to raise money by taxation, even for their most urgent needs, intended to grant to the new Government any such boundless power of taxation for the purposes of both General and State governments, as this theory assumes. Not a hint of any such power was ever breathed in any of their conventions; and it is not too much to say that, in the temper of the people's mind at that time upon this subject of taxation, if the Constitution had been so understood it would have never been adopted.

Mr. President, let us now look at this subject of the power of Congress to appropriate money raised by taxation, in the light of rules of construction based upon reason as well as law, and then let us look at the precedents by which the measure before us is sought to be justified.

Every Senator will concede that one of the main objects in founding the present Constitution was to give to the Government the power of taxation, so as to render it directly self-sustaining. To this end it is declared that "Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises." If the language of the clause had stopped here, inasmuch as the Government was meant to be one of enumerated powers, no one could have well denied the right of appropriation to the purposes specially set forth in the Constitution—especially in view of the subsequent grant of authority to Congress to pass all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution the granted powers. There could not have been then any necessity for an express grant of power to appropriate the proceeds of taxation to such purposes, whilst there was a sound reason for providing that no rescript of the President or of any executive or other officer should unlock the door of the Treasury. Hence the wisdom of that provision that "no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law."

A fuller negative pregnant could not have been framed. Here is at once a denial to all other authorities and a full recognition in Congress of the power to appropriate the public money. There being, then, an implied power of appropriation, and one also clearly expressed in the Constitution, there is manifestly no need to resort for any such grant as President Monroe and his followers have done to the far-fetched and inappropriate words subjoined to the taxing clause, to wit, "to pay the debts and to provide for the common defense and general welfare."

In addition, sir, to the reason that these words are inapt and unnecessary for any such purpose, they have been held by all schools of constructionists to mean something more and different. One school, whose views have already been discussed, and whom I would call the extreme legislative school, have held them not only to enlarge the sphere of taxation and appropriation, but also of legislation. Another, whom I shall call the extreme appropriation school, have construed these words to confer a broader power of taxation and appropriation than Congress without them would have possessed. Whilst others have held that if they operate in any other way than as a mere summary of the special powers about to be granted, it is only as an injunction upon Congress to restrain the exercise of those powers to such objects as may be of a general and not a mere local benefit. If they be words of enlargement at all, it seems to me to be a logical necessity that they shall be construed to reach as far in that direction as their natural import will carry them. If they mean that Congress shall have the power to tax and provide for purposes other than those expressly enumerated in the Constitution, it seems to me to be the dictate of reason and common sense that they must mean that Congress shall assume full and complete jurisdiction over such enlarged scope of legislative power.

The maxim noscitur à sociis, which is one of common sense as well as of law, must apply if such a theory be assumed. In four other clauses of this same eighth section of the first article of the Constitution—those which relate to counterfeiting, to a navy, and to calling forth and organizing the militia—the words "to provide for" are used to confer full powers of legislation. And it would seem unreasonable to construe the same words in the same section (if they can be rightfully rendered into the meaning that "Congress shall have the power to provide for the public schools in the States") as simply meaning that Congress shall have the right to appropriate money for such schools, and there be compelled to stop. Besides, if we look at the terms of the grant, it is to tax the people "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare." Now, in order to adjust and pay the debts of the United States, which are subsequently in express terms assumed, Congress could of course pass all laws necessary to that end. To provide for the common defense, for which Congress is clothed with ample powers, it can pass all laws necessary for that great end. And then by a reasonable and natural parity of reasoning, whatever Congress is authorized to do under this assumed grant of power for the public welfare, if, for instance, it be to provide for public schools in the States, it must be empowered to do in all the fullness of its scope and in all the multiplicity of its details.

If Congress can constitutionally apply money in its Treasury to provide for the support of public schools in the States, it can take charge of them, and to the extent it shall do this it displaces the power of the State and becomes supreme over the subject. And to such an issue, if we enter upon the course of legislation which this bill, if it becomes a law, will inaugurate, will we surely come.

But, Mr. President, the difficulties in the way of our friends who adopt this extreme appropriation creed do not merely consist in the fact that if the words so often quoted are construed to enlarge the powers of Congress they naturally and logically lead to a vastly wider meaning than they are willing to accept, but the further obstacle arises in their way, that they can not reasonably construe these words to mean nothing more than a simple power to appropriate money.

Their own paraphrase of the language of this clause is this, that "Congress shall have power to lay taxes, etc., to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and for all such objects, not elsewhere provided for in the Constitution, as they shall deem of general and not local, national and not State benefit;" or, to apply the principle to the case in hand, "to provide for public schools in the States." If their theory of construction be correct, these last words are just as fully and effectually in the Constitution as if they were therein written. Now, their position, at least as sometimes enunciated, not only requires them to extract from these words a simple power of appropriating money, or, in other words, to grope through the Constitution to find a power which is elsewhere in that instrument staring them in the face; but, unless they claim the right to expunge words from their own paraphrase, it requires them also to draw the power "to tax the people to provide for public schools in the States."

Sir, this would be vastly more than a power of appropriation. It would be a new, substantive, and vital power to tax the people to provide for an object nowhere else in the Constitution subjected to Congressional legislation. It could be in no respect less an original power than that of "providing for a navy." And if such be, as it must be, the case, whether we consider the nature of the object or the language in which the grant is couched, then the subsequent grant of power "to pass all laws necessary and proper for carrying into effect the aforegoing powers" must attach itself to this grant, and Congress is empowered to enact any and all legislation necessary to create and sustain a national system of education in the States to the exclusion of all existing State systems.

And, Mr. President, upon the theory of this appropriation school, is not this a just and reasonable conclusion? I contend it is unreasonable to suppose that Congress is clothed with authority to provide for public schools in the States, and should be at the same time utterly powerless to take a single step towards accomplishing this great object; that Congress can pile up the people's money for the purpose of educating their children, but can do nothing towards utilizing this treasure till they can find some agency outside the sphere of the General Government which can be coaxed, bribed, or coerced to take and apply it. Such a power would indeed look like a ridiculous waste of political energy, of which wise and practical statesmen would hardly have been the authors.

But the anomaly becomes the more glaring when we reflect that ours is a dual system of government, one of a general and one of a local character, in which the local sovereignty is armed with plenary power to establish schools, enact all rules and regulations concerning them, and to raise by taxation all money necessary for their support. It ought not to require a Judge Marshall or a Judge Cooley or any other of our ablest jurists to inform us that in a system like ours, in which each half is clothed with its own peculiar subjects of jurisdiction, and in which what is not granted to the General Government is reserved to the local, and in which what belongs to the State is its right as absolutely as any power granted to the General Government belongs exclusively to it, "State expenses are not to be borne by Federal taxation, nor Federal expenses by State taxation, because in neither case would the taxation be levied by the government upon whose public the burden of expense properly rests"—as sound a reason as ever man gave for any proposition.

Sir, it seems to me that it would be difficult to imagine anything further removed from the spirit, aims, and objects of the founders of this Government than to make it the great alms-giver of the money wrung from the people by taxation, and to turn the States into almoners of the bounty of Congress. Beyond question, such a jumble of powers and duties would have never been created except by the clearest terms. It is utterly unfair to infer it from words which, in order to arrive at any such construction, must be wrested from their historic meaning and undoubted application in the Articles of Confederation, and from that restraining sense which their collocation in the clause plainly shows they were intended to bear. Mr. Madison, as wise and honest a witness as could be produced, with every means of knowledge, has testified that these words were borrowed from the antecedent chart of government, because they had always been considered to be meaningless as a grant of power and only indicative of the general purposes for which the granted powers should be used; and not a single witness has been produced to contradict his convincing statement.

Mr. President, the argument that the theory of the extreme legislative school will lead to extreme and absurd results does not properly belong to those who draw from the same words just as much of original and substantive power as suits their purpose, and there arbitrarily stop. The argumentum ab inconvenienti, or the reductio ad absurdum, is not theirs to use, but rather belongs to those who hold that the words in question are in no sense argumentative of the powers of Congress. For, in the first place, the theory of this extreme appropriation school logically leads (as we have shown) to the same unrestricted legislative power. And, in the second place, as in the one case (according to their own reasoning) no bounds can be set to the power of Congress to legislate upon every subject which may in their opinion conduce to the public welfare, so, in the other, who can draw a line beyond which money may not be appropriated for purposes deemed promotive of the public good? No one has ever yet attempted to fix any boundary but by the use of phrases identical in meaning with that of "the general welfare."

The same vagueness, the same difficulty of being reduced to any definite limits, is inseparable from their famous formula of purposes, "general and not local, National and not State." Adopt whichever construction you please, that of the extreme legislative or appropriation school, and it is the plainest deduction of common sense that the discretion of Congress is the only limit of power. And with respect to the appropriation theory, the history of the past, as illustrated by the very precedent cited in these debates by the supporters of this doctrine, plainly shows that such discretion practically means Congressional will and pleasure, and that its exercise will surely launch us upon a boundless, shoreless sea of expenditures, involving as well objects not specially connected with the sphere of the States as any or all of those governmental agencies peculiarly confided to their care, by the granting of pecuniary aid to which Congress may think it will promote the general welfare.

How utterly vain and idle, then, seems the limitation which Mr. Monroe, at the conclusion of his famous argument on this subject, feels the necessity of attempting to place upon the exercise of this power of appropriation, when he says that "each government (State and National) should look to the great and essential purposes for which it was instituted, and confine itself to such purposes." Who will say, on this side of the Chamber, that the power and duty of providing for schools within the States is not imposed upon their governments? Even Mr. Blaine, in his "Twenty Years of Congress," distinctly makes this declaration. And still Senators, who accept Mr. Monroe's views, are asking the General Government "to look to" a great and leading purpose for which they concede the State governments were intended to provide, and for which it must result that the central government was not instituted.

Mr. President, the only argument left to this appropriation school is, that their construction is the safer one, inasmuch as it does not directly involve the assumption of that stretch of legislative power which would destroy the autonomy of the States. But the "last ditch" of this school of constructionists is, we contend, equally indefensible. It does not meet, it only seeks to parry the argument. They can not help admitting that their doctrine is theoretically open and practically liable to the widest latitude of application, and is therefore subject to the same logical difficulties as that of the extreme legislative school, but is only less dangerous in its consequences.

But, sir, even this last position is far from being a certain result. It requires but little discrimination to see that there will naturally exist a much greater disinclination to exercise the apparently more dangerous and directly revolutionary power. However much men may laugh and jeer at State rights, and profess to hold that a State has no rights which the General Government is bound to respect, I do not believe there is an intelligent man to be found who has been reared under our institutions, and who has been wont to owe the protection of his life, liberty, and property to the State of his birth or adoption, who does not feel in his inmost heart the necessity and the wisdom of perpetually guarding to the home governments all those powers which he knows that his forefathers wisely and anxiously intended should be lodged in them as a sacred trust, and all that complex machinery which it was intended should be their embodiment.

Whatever at times may be the temptation to trench upon these reserved rights, under the seductive influences of partisanship, of a presumed passing necessity, or of a blinding humanitarianism, there will be a natural and an ever-recurring tendency to preserve the true boundaries in direct legislation between the State and Federal powers; and I feel assured that as we recede from the extreme views of both North and South, before, during, and since the late civil war, and from the extreme measures which such views on both sides have naturally engendered, this conservative sentiment will increase, and the beauty and symmetry of our system of government will be more and more loyally maintained.

But not so, sir, will it be with this insidious system of appropriating money by the General Government to exclusively State purposes. This pretended bestowal of gifts, this doling out of alms by Congress to the States, in aid of powers and consequent duties intended alone to be exercised by them, it will ever be argued, can work no harm, as it leaves to the States their autonomy unimpaired, and only asks them to become the recipients of the bounty of a rich and beneficent Government. It is and will be contended that there can be no dislocation of our political system through this extraordinary and unnatural process of the raising of money by one government for the purposes of another. To me this seems but a siren cry. Sir, do we not forget that, especially in the sphere of government, money is power? It not only constitutes the sinews of war, but it alone can set and keep in motion the wheels of government. And do not those Senators on this side of the Chamber who are enamored with this specious plan of Federal appropriations for schools in their States even now see that many of their colleagues on the other side, in voting for such appropriations, sturdily and (upon a kindred hypothesis to their own) with a strong show of reason claim the power of Congress by law to control and direct the expenditure of this money within their States?

And knowing the growing, grasping nature of political power, when once it gets a foothold, do they not see that if this system of appropriations to their schools goes into practical exercise the claimants of this enlarged power of legislation will have a strong vantage-ground upon which to plant their batteries in their assaults upon all constitutional restraint? Surely we must all see the danger if the States are taught to lean upon the General Government for the means to sustain themselves in the discharge of the functions especially committed to their care, that the power which furnishes the coveted supplies will naturally and inevitably claim and exercise the right to control their expenditure. Let us not contract our view to the passing pecuniary advantage which seems likely to accrue to us; but let us look at the grave consequences sure to spring from the adoption of a system of which this bill is but the beginning.

Who is simple enough to believe that this Federal aid to schools within the States will cease with the limit of eight years appointed by this bill? Every one must know that but little can be done in that brief time towards dispelling this cloud of illiteracy. Every one knows that these $79,000,000 will only serve to enlarge the school systems in the South, and to render Federal aid still more essential to their maintenance. If the Representatives of the South in Congress ask and receive this aid at the hands of the North, soon will come up a louder demand for still larger and longer continued appropriations. Larger and still larger demands will come from Congress in the shape of conditions precedent to the continuance and enlargement of these grants, until the whole school systems of the South will pass under the control of Federal power, to be molded as the people of the controlling section see fit. And doubtless these appropriations will be granted with no stinted hand. The money power in the North is even now the controlling influence. That power will readily appropriate tens of millions of dollars per annum, raised by duties upon imports, for Southern schools, when for every dollar they grant they will recoup at least three for the benefit of their protected industries.

Oh, it is a beautiful exhibition of magnanimity and generosity on the one part, and of a simple thankful reception on the other of largesses, taken from the recipient by the one hand of the giver, to be returned as alms by the other hand, to which still sticks a handsome percentage as the reward of his labor of love.

Sir, the people of the Southern States do not seem to comprehend the nature of this bill. They seem to think that the Federal Government, by some magical formula, can create out of nothing this great sum of $79,000,000, and is going to pour it into their laps without cost or charge to the happy recipients. If they will look at this subject in a purely selfish light, let us for a moment so regard it.

They shut their eyes to the fact that the collection of this money upon any fair reckoning will cost the people of the most favored State quite as much as they will receive. They forget that this fund will have to be raised in the proportion of about two-thirds from customs duties to about one-third from internal or excise taxes. The best informed statisticians declare, and I fully believe, that, so far as it is raised from duties on imports, for every dollar that goes into the Treasury at least three will go into the pockets of the manufacturers; so that if $200,000,000 are collected upon importations under the tariff, some $600,000,000 at least will annually go into the hands of this favored class. This becomes apparent when you remember that our last census reports, with a moderate allowance for the increment since 1880, show the annual value of our home manufactures to be $6,000,000,000, and that if we put at only 10 per cent. the average increase of the cost of these home products caused by our war tariff it will make the people of this country pay to the producers of these manufactures at least $600,000,000 per annum, which is just three times as much as goes into the people's Treasury.

Now let me illustrate the operation of this bill by the case of my own State. According to a calculation, made by one of the most painstaking and best-informed Senators in this body, and incorporated in one of his speeches during the first session of the last Congress, Maryland would receive in the eight years, as her quota of the $79,000,000, the sum of $1,666,442, and would pay in the same time into the Treasury $1,308,920. Of this last-mentioned sum she would pay the two-thirds in the shape of customs duties, and, as just shown, she would pay, as a tribute to the manufacturers, three times what she pays into the Treasury in the shape of customs dues. Now, the two-thirds of what she thus pays into the Treasury is two-thirds of $1,308,920, or $872,614. Three times this sum equals $2,617,842, the amount of tribute paid, which must be added to $1,308,920, the amount actually paid into the Treasury; whereby we get the vast sum of $3,490,456 as the real cost of this educational experiment to the people of Maryland, or $1,824,014 during the eight years more than we would receive.

Mr. BLAIR. I understood the Senator to assume that there is a per capita tax——

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. I am referring to the amount allotted to the States.

Mr. BLAIR. But the Senator speaks of the collection into the Treasury originally as if by a per capita tax.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. The money comes from a tax on what the people wear and use. The people of each State pay a portion of the money.

Mr. BLAIR. Every State in the Union pays out on taxation, and gets a part back under this bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. I say that in the case of tariff duties, independent of the amount paid by the consumer to the Treasury, there is another amount that goes to the manufacturer.

Mr. BLAIR. With reference to the particular bill the Senator said the country paid in the form of taxation twice as much as the aggregate the State would get back.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. That it paid three times as much.

Mr. BLAIR. That is an argument against the tariff rather than against this bill, I suppose.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. Against both.

Or if we concede, for the sake of the argument, what is not true in fact, that our tariff with its average duty of about 47 per cent. ad valorem only adds the very small average increase of 5 per cent. to the cost of home manufactures to the people of our country (a postulate which we think the most purblind protectionist can not deny), then for every dollar the people of Maryland would pay into the Treasury through customs duties they would pay in the way of such tribute one and one-half dollars; and carrying out the calculation on this basis in the same way as before, we find that Maryland would pay $951,366 more than she would receive in the eight years. If any portion of the people of my State will shut their eyes to this result, because they do not personally pay over this money in the name of a tax to an officer sitting in the receipt of customs, but prefer the self-delusion involved in receiving as a gift less money than they actually pay, it will not be my fault. I can not vote for a measure which will not only not bring them any pecuniary gain, but will at the same time most insidiously and dangerously tend to disrupt and overthrow our true system of government as founded by our forefathers, and deemed by them essential to our liberties.

For, Mr. President, never was a measure introduced into any legislative body more incongruous with the professed purpose and declared belief of many of its advocates. We want no better illustration than this bill affords us that the General Government will never make these grants of money to the South for school purposes without imposing conditions which virtually amount to the right to control them. Right here, in this first attempt to appropriate for the maintenance of public schools in the States money raised by Federal taxation, with a full disclaimer on the part of the supporters of the bill of an intention to shape or control State school systems, we find the baldest attempts to dictate to the States how their systems shall be ordered and regulated. It first provides that a given number of millions of dollars shall be distributed among the States for the support of common schools upon the basis of illiteracy. If it had stopped there it would have been such a bill as its advocates on this side of the Chamber alone claim the power to enact. But the bill further proceeds to prescribe a course of studies as a condition to the enjoyment of this pretended bounty.

Now, it is a clear deduction of the simplest logic that if we have the power to prescribe any condition of the kind, no matter what it may be, we have the same right to impose as many and as onerous ones as we please. It will be no answer to say that the course of study thus prescribed is one with which all the States either have complied or can readily comply. The radical error, the dangerous and upheaving assumption, consists in arrogating the right to insist upon any such condition at all. I hold it to be not only a hardship upon my State but an insult and a fraud upon its people to tax them upon the pretext of a mere right to appropriate the money thus raised for the benefit of their schools, and then to say to them, "If you do not conform your school legislation to the will of Congress in any respect, you shall be debarred from all benefit of the fund which your own contributions have helped to form." For it is undeniably true in respect even to this subject of studies that if it is competent for you to prescribe a course of studies of the simplest kind, you have the same right to prescribe another of any other grade, or, in other words, you can take entire charge of that branch of school legislation, giving the State the alternative of conforming to your will or of losing all claim to any share in the apportionment.

Another section provides that unless a State raises by home taxation as much money as she will receive under this act she shall forfeit the difference between what she does raise and the amount of her apportionment. Thus, in view of the fact that the amount to be raised under a Federal law is absolutely a matter of Congressional discretion, the principle is announced that a State must adapt her legislation to the will of Congress in the exercise of her sovereign power of taxation or suffer a pro tanto forfeiture as a penalty for her disobedience.

Another section forbids the appropriation of any part of the $77,000,000 allotted to a State for school purposes towards the building of school-houses, which are even now in many of the Southern States a palpable general necessity in the furtherance of education. It renders the erection of still more school-houses throughout some of these States absolutely essential to the proper fruition of this money, but it imposes upon them the necessity of further State taxation for such buildings, or upon failure to comply with this command of Congress makes them forfeit all right to any share of this common fund.

But another section of this bill does appropriate $2,000,000 for aiding in the erection of school-houses, but it minutely provides where and how this money shall be expended. It can only be used in sparsely populated districts in the erection of such buildings, the very plans of which must even come from Washington, and upon the further conditions that no more than $150 shall be paid out of this fund for any one house, and never more than one-half of the whole cost in any case. Thus again the State must conform its legislation to the will of Congress, as well in respect to her sovereign power of taxation as to the details of practical work, or her claim to any share of this theoretically common fund will entirely lapse. And thus this bill, which professes to be a mere innocent, harmless gift of money in aid of education, is on the one hand running over with commands that a State shall do this, or shall not do that, or on the other is bristling with threats of forfeitures, thus boldly denominated in the bill, for a failure to comply with its arbitrary edicts. Let no Senator say, who votes for this measure, that he is not fully committed to the doctrine that Congress in appropriating money in aid of State education can absolutely and without restraint control and direct the States, aye, and enforce its commands, too, as to how they shall shape their legislation upon this branch of exclusive State jurisdiction. That vicious principle is the very life-blood of this measure, and the deadly germ will soon dangerously multiply itself, as these debates show evil precedents are sure to do.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to ask the Senator to have the kindness to read the entire section of the bill leaving the choice to the States to accept or not.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. I have read it.

Mr. BLAIR. Has he noticed the provision that leaves the State entirely free to accept or not?

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. I know the words of the bill. It makes my State pay its quota of the tax, and then says it shall receive so much on compliance with the conditions of the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. Precisely; but assuming the right of the General Government to collect taxes, the money being in the Treasury and the property of the United States and not of the States; assuming that it is there, that it is legally there, and that the money is therefore the property of the United States, then the United States in its discretion may appropriate the funds upon condition, just as it might appropriate any other sum of money for any purpose upon conditions, and make use of the State as an instrumentality to promote the general welfare. Does the Senator in that respect say that the bill impairs the rights of the States?

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. The bill assumes that Congress has power to tax the people and apply the money so raised for the benefit of State schools; and we have not got to say, finding this money in the Treasury, what we have the power to do—we must go back, further to illumine the matter, and say that this bill expects the people to put the money in the Treasury that it may be applied in this way.

Mr. BLAIR. On that point I should like to ask the Senator if he concedes the general, broad proposition that the republican form of government is necessarily founded on the intelligence of the governed, that is of the people at large? Does he concede that proposition?

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. I do, as an abstract proposition.

Mr. BLAIR. Then, conceding it as an abstract proposition, I ask him the further question, if the National Government, whether it be a government of enumerated or limited powers, limited in the matter of number, is not one republican in form, as well as the State government? Is not that the theory of our institutions?

If, then, the National Government is a government republican in form, and the State, as a State government, is a government republican in form, and the National Government by the consent of the State conferred in the Constitution has the duty imposed upon it not only to see that it is republican in form, but to guaranty like republican forms of government to the State—if, I say, the National Government has the duty of self-preservation and of preserving the governments of the States alike imposed upon it, and intelligence be lacking, is it not the duty of the National Government to see that that intelligence be furnished to the citizens in common, alike citizens of the State and of the National Government? I ask the Senator to answer that position. It has never been answered in this debate.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. Mr. President, the question is, where does the Constitution repose the power? That is the question.

Mr. REAGAN. Will the Senator allow me to state——

Mr. BLAIR. It is a matter of indifference to me who answers that question. No Senator has answered it yet since the debate began on this bill.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not know that I answered it in the form the Senator put it; but he omits to recollect——

Mr. BLAIR. Before the Senator goes on, allow me to ask him if he admits the general proposition conceded by the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. REAGAN. I do not know what that general proposition is. But the Senator omits to remember that the Government was founded on the consent of the people; and his theory assumes that the people are incapable of self-government, and that they must be governed by a power superior to themselves.

Mr. BLAIR. The Government may not have been formed on that proposition; but it was based on the idea that the people should have the opportunity to prepare themselves by the necessary intelligence for the discharge of the duties of citizenship both in their Federal and State capacity. If they have not sufficient knowledge or development to act the part of sovereigns they must be qualified for it.

I ask the Senator from Texas, or the Senator from Maryland, or the Senator from any State in this Union to answer the question I have put every time when this constitutional doctrine has been discussed, namely, if the National Government be a government republican in form, and it has imposed upon it the duty to guaranty a government republican in form to the State, and the State neglects to educate the child, and the parent neglects to educate the child, and the child, the sovereign, becomes an ignoramus, and thereby by your own proposition incapable of self-government, is or is not the duty imposed on the nation in that case of last resort to educate the child?

I have admitted in all the debate, I have admitted in the report, that the National Government should undertake this duty only in the last resort. If the parent fails, if the State fails, and republican government consequently fails all through this land, if the States are disorganized and the country desolated, may not the National Government interfere, so far as its republican form is concerned? I ask, then, if it be not within the power of this great nation, clothed by the express provisions of the Constitution with the preservation of a republican form of government, and if it be not its duty to see that its citizens, alike its own and those of the State, be permitted to be intelligent so that there shall be governments republican in form in both State and nation?

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. I neither admit the gentleman's proposition of law, nor do I admit that the States have failed nor that they are going to fail in their duty to their people.

Mr. BLAIR. The question is, what has been done?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield?

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. If the fact were conceded I know the States can provide for the contingency, and the Congress of the United States has not the power under the Constitution. The principles of the Constitution do not allow the General Government to interfere in this matter.

Mr. BLAIR. Then the higher law comes in.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. The Constitution is the highest law for us in our legislative actions.

Again, another section provides that no money shall be paid to any State which shall have not provided a system of free common-school education for all its children of school age without distinction of race or color, either in the raising or in the distribution of school revenues, or in the school facilities afforded. It thus legislatively imposes upon a State the heavy punishment of an immense forfeiture, for making a distinction between the races, and constitutes an executive officer of the Government judge, jury, and executioner of the sentence. I ask Senators whom it most concerns, what hinders the majority of this body from imposing the further condition, that the States shall provide for mixed schools? Allow the underlying principle of this bill, and what hinders them from trebling the amount of taxation imposed by this bill, and then coolly saying to the State of Mississippi that her people shall have no share of their own hard-earned money unless they consent to educate white children and black in the same schoolhouses and in the same classes by the same teachers?

The answer must be, nothing but the at present politic forbearance of that majority. The mutterings of the storm have already been heard in the distance. Surely it would be safer not to launch out upon the sea. We have seen what are the fruits of this new and revolutionary system of legislation in the green tree; what shall we have a right to expect in the dry?

Now, Mr. President, let us not be told that Congress does not actually establish any school system in a State by direct legislation, but only enacts conditions to which we must conform or lose all benefit of the fund which we help to place in the common treasury. Such a law, it is plain, will prove a direct and powerful agency towards coercing States into just such law-making as Congress chooses to impose upon them.

It would be an entering wedge to the control of State systems of education to be driven home by the resistless influences of great and much-coveted appropriations on the one hand, and of heavy penalties upon the other. If it were in the power of a State to escape taxation whilst rejecting all benefit of such a law, there would be little practical hardship. But she must pay her quota of taxation, and then, if she does not bow the knee to Federal dictation, she is driven away like a whipped child from the feast which she has herself helped to prepare. Sir, if the representatives of the States and of the people once succumb to this species of legislation, then, indeed, will they lie prostrate at the feet of Federal power, and be reduced to the most disgraceful of all subjections, based in equal degrees upon the ignoble motives of greed and fear.

Now, sir, I ask Senators, especially on this side of the Chamber, if a more insidious or dangerous system of legislation ever has been or can be devised? Can one more insulting or degrading to a great and sovereign State be conceived, than that which claims and exercises the mighty power of taxation over the people of that State for school purposes within its limits, and then sternly tells them that they must practically so adjust their theoretically sovereign power over this delicate subject as to meet the views of the great Colossus at Washington, or they shall forfeit all share of the money thus forced from their pockets? Could any law be more tyrannical, more thoroughly imbued with the spirit of absolutism than that which claims the right to tax you, and then to shut you out from all benefit of your own money unless you conform to the will of the taxing power, which at the same time disclaims all right to control that governmental agency with respect to which it is seeking to coerce you? If the manly, straightforward claim of Congressional power to directly legislate on the subject of education in the States were claimed and exercised, then such a law would either operate by virtue of its own inherent authority, or the courts could pronounce it invalid as a usurpation. In this natural and healthy mode of legislation there could be no room for an attempt to bribe or terrorize over a State through a law which can only operate through the assent and co-operation of the State thus illegitimately obtained, and which, if it does, in this, the only possible way, become operative, can in no conceivable mode be reviewed by the courts.

Finally, sir, the crowning feature of inconsistency and unreasonableness in this species of legislation is this: that it professes to be predicated upon a power in Congress to tax the people to promote the general welfare through the instrumentality of State educational systems, and then claims the right practically to dictate to a State how it shall order its own system, conceded to be within its own peculiar province, or, if obedience be refused, excludes it from all participation in that general welfare, the promotion of which is its only claim to the exercise of any such power. Sir, to my mind this arrogation of power to appropriate money out of the Federal Treasury for the benefit of State institutions is, to the last degree, abnormal, illogical, and dangerous. In the very nature of things, unlike donations of public lands or their proceeds, it is limitless, both in amount and in duration, so long as the people of the country have property or labor to be taxed. It naturally and irresistibly leads to the exercise of illegal and usurped power; and if it should be now begun it will inevitably become a fixed policy, aggregating to itself more and more of control over the States, until it degenerates into a cancerous growth which will impair the manhood and self-reliance of our people, destroy the symmetry of our government, and end in the virtual paralysis of home rule, that vital element in our republican system.

For these reasons, Mr. President, drawn from the very nature of our Government, from the natural meaning of the words in question, and from the revolutionary consequences of giving an enlarging sense to their meaning, I am firmly convinced that the construction of neither the extreme legislative nor appropriation school is admissible, but that the only true and safe theory is that these words are restrictive in their meaning, and simply declare that Congress, in all its legislation by which money raised by taxation is to be applied, should exercise the powers specifically granted to it, either in discharging the debts of the Government, or in providing for the common defense, or in caring for the welfare, not of local, partial, or sectional interests, but of the whole country, for whose welfare the Constitution and Government were formed.

But, sir, the advocates of this practically unlimited power of appropriation appeal with an air of triumph to various precedents in our legislative history as the bulwark of their theory; and we strongly suspect that some Senators who have most powerfully wielded this argument have boldly quoted precedents which they have been wont to condemn as unconstitutional and void, as they certainly have adduced others for which abundant warrant can be elsewhere found in the Constitution and in judicial decisions thereon. The records of Congressional appropriations have been searched with a minute and exhaustive scrutiny, and every such act for which no other sanction can be found has been promptly referred to this claim of the indefinite right to appropriate money.

No matter how earnestly and powerfully the ablest and best men of the country may have protested against any particular act as utterly without constitutional sanction; no matter though a similar act may have been at other times and by other statesmen disallowed as beyond the power of Congress; no matter how plainly any act may have been the product of a presumed political necessity, or the impulse of political passion, or the prompting of compassion toward starving humanity; no matter how wide may have been the departure from all possible connection with the general welfare, as soon as such an act is exhumed it is urged as a precedent for the right of Congress to appropriate the public money for any purpose which may strike its fancy. Every roll of the ball down hill is used to give it increased momentum, and to drag the Constitution, which they wind around it, down into the bog of limitless Congressional power, until at last the fact that Congress may have granted a few thousands of dollars to alleviate the wants of a few sufferers from an earthquake in South America, or to apply the balm of charity to a few storm-stricken or plague-smitten people in some county or two in this great Union, is gravely used to enforce the momentous, far-reaching, revolutionizing proposition that Congress can tax the American people to the tune of countless millions for the support of the State institutions of public schools, and in making appropriations for such purposes can whip the States into a legislative compliance with their will or tyranically rob them of all participation in this grand movement in behalf of the general welfare.

And now, Mr. President, what is the proposition of constitutional law, in support of which precedents are to be found? It is this and nothing else, that Congress has the right to raise money by taxation for the purpose of appropriating it in aid of public schools in the States, which are confessedly nothing but purely State institutions. I aver that, in the whole course of our legislative history, there has been no precedent of the exercise of any such power. If there has been, let it be produced. If during the course of a whole century of our existence as one people, no such precedent can be found, notwithstanding the great needs and loud calls for governmental aid to popular education from first to last, then I earnestly insist that this fact amounts to an original, continuous, and unbroken consensus of the people and of their representatives in Congress, that no such power exists. The whole history of this country is a standing precedent against any such claim.

President after President has recommended the grant of aid to education, so far as the power existed to do so, generally accompanying such recommendation by a suggestion that a change be made in the organic law to reach the desired result. But never, so far as I know, was any measure ever formulated and urged in Congress, looking to any such end by the grant of money raised by taxation, until years after our unhappy civil war ended; and I doubt very much whether it would have even then been done if its author had not been caught in the torrent, which, ever since that war, and as a natural recoil from the one extreme of secession, has been rushing towards the other extreme of imperialism.

But, Mr. President, whilst the universally prevalent sentiment and policy of the country and of its legislators have been against the appropriation of money raised by taxation to public schools in the States, we all know that it has been the common sentiment and practice of our people and their legislators to devote large sections of their public lands to such purposes, from the beginning down to the present time. Legislators, statesmen, jurists, commentators upon constitutional law, all men of the widest reputation, have agreed that the public lands could rightfully be donated by Congress to our public schools; whilst few indeed, till these latter days, have been the men of note who have practically contended for a like power of granting tax-raised money. I contend, then, that it is neither fair nor logical to infer from the series of acts donating public lands a like power to grant money to public schools. If Congress had ever claimed the power to make such grants it would have been little short of a miracle not to have once exercised it during nearly a whole hundred years, with the subject of education ever before them, and demands for aid ever coming up to them. This virtual disclaimer on the part of Congress of the right to appropriate the people's money to public schools, I say again, is equivalent to a continuous precedent against its exercise.

But, Mr. President, the want of analogy between the appropriation of money raised by taxation and donations of public lands can be further shown by reference to the distinct clauses in the Constitution upon which they depend, and which I contend are different in their origin, scope, and application. In their origin they bore no kind of connection or relation with one another. The original public lands were mostly ceded to the confederated States, with a power and duty in Congress, as their agent and trustee, to dispose of them for the common benefit of the States. But every one knows that the confederate government had not the least power to raise a dollar by taxation, nor in fact had it any power of appropriation in any proper sense of the word. It was made a great land-owner by these deeds of cession; and by the trust powers thereby conferred alone had authority to sell these lands, or to dispose of them by grant among the States, only preserving the equity of equality of benefit in all their acts. The confederate government exercised these powers of disposition, and must have done so without any reference to any power of taxation or appropriation, to which they were entire strangers. It must have made such dispositions of the public lands as a great trustee of an immense landed estate, which it held in trust to dispose of for the common benefit of all the States as in its best judgment the common benefit of all should require.

In this attitude of affairs the present Constitution was formed and this Government went into operation. In not one syllable did the new Constitution alter the character of the ownership of these lands or of the trusts with which they had been impressed. It recognized the ownership of the confederate States, which had rested entirely upon the deeds of cession, and gave it, in the new government, the impregnable basis of constitutional sanction. It gives us not the slightest hint of any intention to alter, modify, or in any manner affect the trusts by such deeds created, but, on the contrary, uses language intended to perpetuate them. Upon every principle of law, equity, and justice the new Government took these lands impressed with the trusts imposed by the grantors in those deeds, and as those trusts had been understood and acted upon by the old trustee. And under and according to those trusts as thus understood has the Federal Government ever since administered this property. And again I say that, as originally, under the old system, the power to dispose of these lands had no connection with or analogy to any power of taxation or appropriation of money thus raised, so there is not the slightest shadow of ground for the effort under the new system to establish any such relation. The taxing clause, on the other hand, conferred an entirely new power to enable the new Government to raise revenue for the express purposes for which it was created. The territory clause conferred the authority to hold and administer the public lands according to the trusts which came with them, which trusts had received a practical meaning and application among the parties to the original contract. So that we see from the plain history of the two clauses that they were of different origin, and should be, and have been, as we have just seen, continued wide apart in their scope and application.

But, sir, those who think as I do on this subject are always met with the objection that this reasoning can not apply to the lands subsequently acquired by treaty from France, Spain, and Mexico. To those who stand so sturdily upon the doctrine of precedents we might reply that the frequent, continued, and universal practice of the Government in disposing of all our public lands, without distinction as to the time or mode of acquisition, plants the right to do so upon an impregnable basis. But we do not intend to stop at thus commending to the lips of Senators their own chalice. We insist that whether the power of Congress to dispose of these later acquisitions of territory depends upon the territorial clause, or whether it results from the power to acquire territory by treaty, conquest, or purchase, in either case such power of disposition is plenary and only qualified by the duty to see that such disposition equitably and fairly conduces to the common benefit of all the beneficiaries.

If we refer such power to the clause authorizing Congress to dispose of the territory, as is done by a majority of the decisions of the Supreme Court, then Senators on the other side of this question do not seem to deny the existence of this power, but only contend that it equally applies to "other property," and that these words also include money in the Treasury of the country. I have found no commentator on the Constitution to whom it has occurred to construe these words in any such sense. I think it will be found that never, till the debates upon this measure created the exigency, was it ever contended in or out of Congress that this phrase applied to money. The words "dispose of" are not apt words to express the control of Congress over money in the Treasury. Their proper meaning is to sell, barter, or give away. They peculiarly indicate the authority of Congress over visible, tangible property, such as lands and movable personal property. And such is the meaning given to these words by the Supreme Court in the case of Dred Scott vs. Sandford, where they are made to signify such property as "ships, guns, arms, munitions of war," and other specific articles of property.

Moreover, sir, these words not only fail to properly describe the power to apply public money to public uses, but before the Constitution reaches the territorial clause in question it has already in its first article disposed of the subject of money by giving Congress, in the most suitable language possible, the power "to appropriate" money in the Treasury by law. When its framers reached this fourth article other subjects than money were in their minds. The rights or liabilities of citizens or persons in States, the powers of admitting new States, and of disposing of the public lands as preparatory to the formation of new political communities in due time to become States—these were the subjects then engaging their attention. And whilst conveying to Congress the power to deal with such property, with a view to that brevity so distinctive of this instrument, it embraced in three words, within the same provisions, property not before or elsewhere mentioned, to wit, specific movable property, such as that enumerated by the Supreme Court. Money, therefore, by no reasonable intendment is included in this clause; but it does confer plenary power of disposition over the public lands, if human language can be made to do so.

And such, sir, will be the conclusion if we suppose that the power of disposition over these more recently acquired lands and the government of the Territories formed out of them alone inure to Congress through the power to acquire them, according to the opinion of the Supreme Court in the Dred Scott case. The power to acquire, to become a great proprietor of lands, would seem even more naturally to carry with it a full power of disposition over them, subject to a just regard to the common benefits of the States and the people, than it implies and confers, as the court in that case declares it does, all such powers of legislation over persons and property in such Territory as are not inconsistent with the Constitution.

The courts have treated this disposing power as plenary. Even in the Dred Scott case, whilst seeking to hedge around with restraints the political power of Congress over citizens and their property in the Territories, they nowhere seek to qualify this power of disposition over the wild lands. On the contrary, in some of the opinions the power of Congress over them is in terms declared to be "plenary." And if there be any subject upon which Congress has, from first to last, acted with an unrestrained discretion, it is with regard to all our public lands; and it is now too late to question such power of disposition, if, indeed, any one desires to do so, so long as their acts are characterized by equity and fair dealing.

Nor, sir, does the disposition of these lands in aid of education in the States, even if alone referred to the power to acquire them, furnish any analogy by which to justify the appropriation to public schools of money raised by taxation.

The one act is that of a great land-owner disposing of its property lawfully acquired through the treaty-making power out of great reasons of public policy, and for the common good of the States and the people; the other act involves the taking of the property of the people by taxation for the direct support of the Government.

The one act concerns the disposition of a large amount of public property, acquired for great public purposes, and as a mere incident to an express power in the Constitution, and, according to the doctrine of the court in the Dred Scott case, unaffected by a single line or word in that instrument in the nature of an express provision as to its management, and therefore necessarily left to the discretion of Congress as to the mode in which it shall be applied to the benefit of the people; the other act is the exercise of the expressly granted power of taxation, which in its very nature is unsusceptible of being attended by any implied powers, and which the appropriation school can only amplify in its meaning by giving an enlarging sense at one time to words which at another they say are intended to have a restraining effect. Nor does it make any difference, as is so often urged, if in the acquisition of such lands public money has been expended. Such accessions of territory might be made without the spending of a dollar, but it would make no difference in the powers of Congress over them.

Sir, when these great annexations of territory had been made, I presume the last consideration of the Government or of the people was that of gaining a resource for revenue. And if such was their aim, our history has shown how vain was their expectation. No, sir; great reasons of state, the ambition to extend the area and sources of our national power and greatness, the addition of great commonwealths to the galaxy of States, the desire to secure a more eligible and defensible frontier, the necessity to secure great prospective centers of commerce on the Gulf or on the Pacific, these and like motives impelled our people to so vastly enlarge our national domain. And when public money has been expended in aid of such acquisitions, it has not been applied as a fund to be returned to defray the ordinary expenses of government, but as a mere incident in the execution of a treaty made by the President and the Senate, which is expressly ordained to be the supreme law of the land, and to complete the exercise of a power fully reposed in these branches of our Government.

And if lands are thus acquired under the doctrine as announced in the Dred Scott case, the Government takes and manages them, not under any power in the Constitution to appropriate money, or even to dispose of lands as therein prescribed, but because the ownership thus devolved upon it renders it absolutely necessary for Congress to dispose of the lands and to govern the people living thereon as their discretion shall lead them to think best for the interests of the whole country, subject only to such restraints as the Constitution may impose with reference to the rights of the citizen over his person and property.

Whatever view, then, we take of the power to dispose of the public lands, whether it be referred to the territorial or to the treaty-making clause, it is as plenary as the power of a trustee can be, who is bound to have an honest regard to the common interests of his beneficiaries. And the acts of such trustee in disposing of such lands, as has been done in almost every possible way, are not to be made precedents for like appropriations of tax-raised money, for there is no affinity nor parallelism between the two exercises of power nor with respect to the grounds upon which they respectively rest.

Mr. President, in piling up their precedents in favor of this bill, Senators have thrown in for good count many which clearly rest upon other clauses of the Constitution and can not with any fairness be impressed into their service. The acquisition of Louisiana and other territories, according to them, can only be justified upon their general-welfare clause, although the Senators who helped to make and the Representatives who voted the money for the treaties under which they were acquired thought they were acting under the treaty-making power, and although the Supreme Court in three or four cases has affirmed the power as properly resting upon that basis. They seek also to drive us to this same house of refuge when we grant extra pay to our employés, although it seems very reasonable to the ordinary mind that if we have the right to employ officials to do certain work for the Senate we not only necessarily have the right to fix their compensation, but after the work is done we have equal power with any other employer to add to the original stipulated compensation what we think just and proper. If we have not, I would like to hear the argument formulated which would repose our right to increase the pay of a few officials of the Senate upon the ground that "it provides for the general welfare of the United States."

Again, sir, I never supposed that any Senator could have any difficulty over the right of Congress "to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever" over the District of Columbia, even to the extent of establishing a great library worthy of Congress and of the seat of government for 60,000,000 of people, or of erecting monuments therein to the memory of the Father of his Country, or of other illustrious dead. Nor could I doubt the power of Congress to grant pensions to men disabled in the Army or Navy service, even after a war is over, and without any previous express contract. I believe that such laws, as well as those erecting monuments to great and heroic commanders, have a tendency to cultivate a wholesome military spirit, and to greatly aid Congress in executing its power "to raise and support armies."

The Constitution only enumerates the powers granted to the Government, but does not attempt the vain task of defining everything that can be done under any one of them. That depends upon the consideration whether the proposed act reasonably and effectively tends to accomplish the end which the power is designed to reach. Without doing violence to the Constitution, but in full consonance with its provisions, especially as construed by the Supreme Court, many other acts of Congress which have been cited in these debates as only referable to the so-called "general-welfare" clause, may be fully justified, particularly under the commercial clause, and especially so far as it relates to foreign commerce, which the Supreme Court has decided to be "coextensive with the subject of commerce itself, and may be exercised to its utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations other than are prescribed in the Constitution."

But, Mr. President, doubtless many other acts have been cited for which no sanction can be found in the Constitution, and probably least of all in a "general-welfare clause," if such a one could really be discovered in that instrument. Very many of them, to use the words of an old Revolutionary patriot, can only be properly cited to illustrate "the enormities towards which precedents travel." Congress has the ability, rightfully or wrongfully, to expend the people's money whenever and for whatsoever it pleases. But I am not one of those who believe that Congress, like an English king, can do no wrong. Beyond question, Congress has spent millions of money in modes and for purposes not only utterly wasteful, but without any constitutional warrant. Having the ability and with no tribunal to restrain them, it would have been a miracle, indeed, if they had not done so. And it seems to me a dangerous and not a very patriotic act for a statesman of distinction to stand up in this Senate and quote many of these acts as done in the promotion of the general welfare, and thus attempt to implant in the Constitution a manufactured power, from which they would be as far removed as pole from pole.

Mr. President, the great mass of the precedents which have been cited in these debates have no bearing upon or relation to any of the institutions especially belonging to the States, and therefore they do not tend to disturb or impair their autonomy. Such acts cannot be properly quoted as precedents for any thing except that Congress will rightfully or wrongfully spend the people's money. They in no degree trench upon any right reserved to or duty incumbent on the State; and even if they could be justified under the Constitution, they could not logically or fairly, upon any principle of analogical reasoning, be used to justify another act of Congress which would in any manner or degree usurp the functions of a State government over one of its undoubted branches of jurisdiction. The force of analogical reasoning depends upon the similarity of the cases reasoned from to the case to be drawn within an asserted rule. And here the utter dissimilarity in leading facts and conditions divests the reasoning of all legitimate force.

Mr. President, there are other precedents often quoted, upon which I would like to comment, but I have not the time nor you the patience for any further discussion by me of this subject. I will conclude by affirming that there could be no greater misnomer than to term this a bill to promote the general welfare. I charge, and I think I have proved, that its real spirit and direct tendency, if it shall ever become a law, will do more to overthrow the balances of our Constitution, to undo the noble work of the heroes and sages, of what I fear we with a mere lip service term an honored past, and to turn this center of government into an imperial Rome and the dwarfed and paralyzed States into subject provinces, than any measure which the direst enemy of our country could devise. And that man's mind, it seems to me, must have become thoroughly un-Americanized, who would not regard this as an evil of enormous magnitude.

And all this fearful strain is to be put upon our institutions in the name and in the behalf of our African fellow-citizens. Sir, is it not time that the shadow of the Dark Continent should cease to project itself further and further over our people and their institutions? It seems to me that in this instance the startling and dangerous departure is all the more to be deprecated, as it is altogether unnecessary. I do not deny, but on the contrary I insist, that the colored children of the South should be educated as rapidly as it is wise and expedient to do so. But I believe that the task had better be left where the Constitution places it, with the States where these people live. I believe the Southern people can accomplish this task without any extraneous aid if their energies are not deadened by being taught to look for outside help. In any event, that aid is not so great as may be supposed.

I can not for a moment admit that the vast and cumbrous machinery of this bill, taxing the people of the country $79,000,000, and then distributing it, in part, to States that confessedly do not need it, and to other States as though they were subject provinces, is at all needful to accomplish the desired end. If the Northern people are willing to effect all that this bill can do for the benefit of the colored people, and without rendering themselves liable to the charge of speculating upon their own benevolence, let them agree to pass an act appropriating, in just proportions, to the Southern States a liberal share of the public lands, in aid of what the white people, in the midst of the wreck of their earthly fortunes, have been and are so nobly doing for the cause of education, both among blacks and whites; and let this be done, not merely for eight years, but so long as the exigency of the case may require. This will enable the Southern people to educate the colored children just as fast as that branch of the great problem will admit of solution, even if the annual apportionment should be less as compared with that under this bill.

Let these donations be unconditionally given. The public mind in the South is so awakened with respect to the deep necessity of general education that there is no danger of any misapplication of such donations of public lands. And Congress would at any time have it in its power to repeal and forsake the whole system, if any State should prove recreant to its trust. Such a law would strip this question, as multitudes of our people view it, of all constitutional difficulty, put us in the line of general accepted precedents, and would divest the Government of that parental attitude, in which this bill presents it, of holding out tempting sweets in one hand and a threatening rod in the other, lest its refractory children should lapse into rebellion against its despotic will.

Mr. President, powerful arguments have been made by able journals of the country, and also by the Senators from Texas and Missouri, to prove that the Southern States are fully able and are showing their ability to master the difficulties of this question without any aid from Congress at all. Facts apparently well authenticated by responsible officials, State and Federal, show that the Senator from New Hampshire has taken from his palette colors that are entirely too black to paint his frightful cloud of illiteracy, so far as it affects the proper view of this question. He has chosen to gather his statistics from early post-bellum days, just after slavery had been made to empty its vast flood of ignorance into the stream of American citizenship, and when the volume of that flood had been largely increased by multitudes of white children whom the utter disorganization of schools during and after the war had unhappily left to grow up in ignorance. Then for a gloomy period illiteracy was on the increase; but for years past, under the rapid development of public schools, it has steadily and largely decreased. Reliable statistics show that the ratios of children enrolled in schools, of average daily attendance, and of length of school year in days, in many of the Southern States, is either equal or nearly equal to those of New Hampshire, and in all are making such progress that if her Senator whose name this bill bears does not stir up his people they will soon be themselves comparative laggards in the race.

I just now said that I was in favor of educating the colored children of the South as rapidly as it is expedient and safe to do so. Those who look on from a distance may wonder why it should not be done as rapidly as money can be made to accomplish the task. Sir, as there is no royal road to learning, so there is no short-hand method of transforming a rude, unlettered, naturally indolent, and morally weak-natured race of people into fully developed citizens, competent for the discharge of their high functions. Most assuredly it can not be done by a too rapid development of the mental side of their nature, without somewhat of a corresponding advance in the other sides of the moral and the industrial. Such a course would only cause a race of people whose circumstances, as a rule, render it absolutely imperative for them to live by manual labor, to despise and neglect labor, and to be turned into miserable lazzaroni instead of useful citizens.

In the name of all that is sacred and just, let them be educated, but let them at the same time be practically taught that habits of industry and thrift are the great and absolutely requisite levers by which a landless and moneyless race is to be lifted up in the scale of humanity This can never be done so long as they and their parents are taught, as this bill has been made to teach them, that the elements of an education are the be-all and end-all of citizenship.

Sir, there is not a State in the South in which colored children have not at this time by far better educational facilities than the masses of the people in any State of this Union had in the early days of the Republic. And who does not know that under that old system, when children went to school for a few months in the year, during which their help was not required on the farm or in the workshop, and manfully labored at home when work was to be done, were reared hundreds of thousands of the best, ablest, and most useful men of our country in every vocation of life?

And such being the case, if ever there was a line of policy at any time or among any people, to which the maxim of festina lente fully applied, in my opinion it is this of the education of the colored children of the South. The end of that policy is good citizenship, an end which those who have had an opportunity to observe on the spot, if they are candid, will concede may be seriously obstructed by too great haste in only one line of advance.

Sir, I shall be most grievously misunderstood if, from these closing remarks, I shall be regarded as other than a firm and abiding friend and advocate of educating our colored youth. Any Southern man who does not, from his inmost heart, desire such an end, is an enemy of his country, and especially of the section in which he lives. I only view the question in a practical point of view, natural to a man who lives on the spot where the work is to be done. The Senator from New Hampshire, in the fullness of a large and generous heart, views it from his Northern hills in the light of a burning sentimental philanthropy, which flames the higher in proportion to his distance from the scene of action.

Mr. COKE obtained the floor.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from Texas if he will yield to a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator yield for that purpose?

Mr. COKE. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eighteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 11, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 10, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of so much of the Journal as relates to the introduction and reference of bills.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The remainder of the Journal was read and approved.

CORRECTION.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask to make a correction of the RECORD. In the discussion of the proposition pending before the House on yesterday to allow each member a clerk I find on page 330 of the RECORD that some of the remarks of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DOUGHERTY] are credited to me. While I sympathize somewhat with the position assumed by the gentleman, I should vote against the measure if reported from the committee, as it would probably cost me less to employ my own stenographer for such purposes than to undertake to explain such a vote to my constituents. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

BRIDGES ACROSS THE ILLINOIS AND CALUMET RIVERS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, a report concerning the present condition of bridges across the Illinois and Calumet Rivers, Illinois and Indiana; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 11, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXPENSES OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report from the secretary and disbursing agent of the Interstate Commerce Commission showing the disbursements for all purposes since the organization of the Commission, together with a memorandum of outstanding and unpaid obligations; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented resolutions adopted by the city council of Wilmington, Del., favoring the establishment of a permanent exposition in honor of the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America by Christopher Columbus; which was referred to the Select Committee on the Centennial of the Constitution and the Discovery of America.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Board of Trade of Zanesville, Ohio, favoring the proposed world's exposition in honor of the fourth centenary of the discovery of America by Christopher Columbus; which were referred to the Select Committee on the Centennial of the Constitution and the Discovery of America.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of Jeannie Stone, widow of General Charles P. Stone, praying to be granted a pension, and a petition of citizens of Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, and Pennsylvania in support of her petition; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VEST presented a petition of citizens of the First, Fourth, and Twelfth Congressional districts of Missouri, praying for the passage of the bill for the prohibition of the manufacture, sale, and importation of all alcoholic beverages in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. VOORHEES presented a petition of citizens of the Eighth, Twelfth, and Thirteenth Congressional districts of Indiana, praying for the passage of the bill for the prohibition of the manufacture, sale, and importation of all alcoholic beverages in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of one-armed and one-legged ex-soldiers of Newark, N. J., praying for the passage of Senate bill 913, to grant arrears of pensions in certain cases; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SABIN presented a resolution adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of St. Paul, Minn., favoring the expedition of the fast mail from the East to the Northwest in its transfer at Chicago so as to obviate the present unnecessary delay of two hours; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the St. Paul (Minn.) Chamber of Commerce, favoring the creation of an independent collection district with port of entry and residence of collector at St. Paul; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of 180 citizens of the First and Fifth Congressional districts of Minnesota, praying for the passage of the bill for the prohibition of the alcoholic liquor traffic in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 495) for the relief of Albert H. Emory, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 396) for the relief of Sarah E. E. Perine, widow and administratrix of William Perine, deceased, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 660) for the relief of Charles Murphy, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

DISTRICT STREET-RAILWAY TAXES.

Mr. SPOONER submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be, and it is hereby, directed to inquire whether the street-railway corporations of the District are paying a fair proportion of taxes, regard being had to the value of their franchise and property and the amount of their earnings; and also whether a just tax upon the gross earnings of said companies is not, in the public interest, preferable to the present system of valuing and taxing such property.

And the said committee may, in prosecuting such inquiry, send for persons and papers, administer oaths, and employ a stenographer; said committee to report by bill or otherwise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin ask for the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to my honorable friend from Wisconsin that under the rule such a resolution has to go to the Committee on Contingent Expenses, to be reported by them.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not hear the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that a resolution which involves the payment of money from the contingent fund of the Senate requires to be submitted to the Committee on Contingent Expenses before its final passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, under the rules.

PACIFIC RAILWAY COMMISSION REPORT.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested to transmit to the Senate the report of the commissioners appointed by him under the provisions of chapter 345 of the Statutes of the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress, entitled "An act authorizing an investigation of the books, accounts, and methods of railroads which have received aid from the United States, and for other purposes."

DISTRICT PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Mr. BLAIR submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, directed to report to the Senate a list of the names of all the teachers employed in the public schools of the District of Columbia, giving in connection with each teacher the following facts:

1. The grade of school in which now employed.
2. Length of service in the grade of school in which now employed.
3. Length of service in the public schools of the District of Columbia.
4. Present salary.
5. Increase in salary the present school year.
6. What salary the teacher would be entitled to receive under the schedule of salaries in force prior to its repeal by the establishment of the present schedule by an order of the commissioners dated July 1, 1886.

Also to report the amount expended and to be expended during the present fiscal year for the purpose of industrial education in said public schools, distinguishing the amounts so expended respectively in white and in colored schools; and giving in detail the names of the teachers, janitors, and other employés, the salary of each, the place where employed, the kind of instruction given by each teacher, the buildings rented and the rent paid per annum for each, the cost of fitting up each building, including the cost of tools and apparatus, the cost of materials and supplies for each school, the number of pupils in each school, and the number of hours per week each pupil receives instruction.

TRAVIS'S PORTRAIT OF LINCOLN.

Mr. VOORHEES submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library are instructed to inquire into the advisability of the purchase of the life-size portrait of Abraham Lincoln, painted by the late W. F. Travis in the winter of 1864-'65.

SCHOOL LAND GRANTS TO STATES.

Mr. BUTLER submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, First. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to report to the Senate the number of acres of public land granted by the United States Government to the respective States to which grants of land have been made for school purposes; that said report be made by States.

Second. That he also report the number of acres of public land that would be necessary to place those States which have never received such grants upon an equal footing with the States to which such grants have been made.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. HAWLEY. The information called for in the first branch of the resolution can all be found in the book known as The Public Domain, compiled by a committee appointed a few years ago.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, but I prefer to have it in an official form from the Department.

The resolution was agreed to.

CONDITION OF THE CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. HALE. I desire to call up a resolution submitted by me before the holiday recess, for the purpose of submitting some remarks upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? If not, the order of morning business is closed. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a resolution which will be read by the Chief Clerk.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. HALE December 12, 1887, as follows:

Whereas sections 11 and 14 of "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," approved January 16, 1883, provide as follows:

"SEC. 11. That no Senator, or Representative, or Territorial Delegate of the Congress, or Senator, Representative, or Delegate elect, or any officer or employé of either of said Houses, and no executive, judicial, military, or naval officer of the United States, and no clerk or employé of any department, branch, or bureau of the executive, judicial, or military, or naval service of the United States, shall, directly or indirectly, solicit or receive, or be in any manner concerned in soliciting or receiving, any assessment, subscription, or contribution, for any political purpose whatever, from any officer, clerk, or employé of the United States, or any department, branch, or bureau thereof, or from any person receiving any salary or compensation from moneys derived from the Treasury of the United States.

"SEC. 14. That no officer, clerk, or other person in the service of the United States shall, directly or indirectly, give or hand over to any other officer, clerk, or person in the service of the United States, or to any Senator or member of the House of Representatives, or Territorial Delegate, any money or other valuable thing on account of or to be applied to the promotion of any political object whatever."

And whereas the spirit of said act has been interpreted by the President and by the Commissioners of the Civil Service Commission charged with its execution as forbidding all officers of the General Government from offensively participating in political conventions and elections, the President, in his order addressed to the heads of the Departments in the service of the General Government, dated July 14, 1886, setting forth his reasons for the same, as follows:

"EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, July 14, 1886.

"To the Heads of the Departments in the service of the General Government:

"I deem this a proper time to especially warn all subordinates in the several Departments and all office-holders under the General Government against the use of their official positions in attempts to control political movements in their localities. Office-holders are the agents of the people—not their masters. Not only is their time and labor due to the Government, but they should scrupulously avoid in their political action, as well as in the discharge of their official duty, offending by a display of obtrusive partisanship their neighbors who have relations with them as public officials. They should also constantly remember that their party friends from whom they have received preferment have not invested them with the power of arbitrarily managing their political affairs. They have no right as office-holders to dictate the political action of their party associates or to throttle freedom of action within party lines by methods and practices which pervert every useful and justifiable purpose of party organization.

"The influence of Federal office-holders should not be felt in the manipulation of political primary meetings and nominating conventions. The use by these officials of their positions to compass their selection as delegates to political conventions is indecent and unfair, and proper regard for the proprieties and requirements of official place will also prevent their assuming the active conduct of political campaigns. Individual interest and activity in political affairs are by no means condemned. Office-holders are neither disfranchised nor forbidden the exercise of political privileges, but their privileges are not enlarged, nor is their duty to party increased to pernicious activity by office-holding. A just discrimination in this regard between the things a citizen may properly do and the purposes for which a public office should not be used is easy, in the light of a correct appreciation of the relation between the people and those intrusted with official place and a consideration of the necessity under our form of government of political action free from official coercion. You are requested to communicate the substance of these views to those for whose guidance they are intended.

"GROVER CLEVELAND."

And Commissioner Oberly, in his letter to the Illinois Democratic Association, dated September 29, 1887, interpreting the statute as follows:

"Now, does it not follow that officers, clerks, and other persons in the service of the United States, who are organized for political purposes, and who by initiation fees, dues, and contributions defray the expenses of this organization, are violating sections 11 and 14 of the civil-service act? They are giving—they are handing over—to officers, clerks, or other persons in the service of the United States, and these persons, acting as officers of the association, as the representatives of the associated officers, clerks, and other persons in the service of the United States, are receiving money for political purposes, money to be applied to the promotion of political objects."

And whereas it is alleged that, notwithstanding the provisions of said act, and notwithstanding the interpretation placed upon the same by the authorities as above quoted, numerous Federal officers, appointed by the present Administration, have unduly and offensively exhibited a pernicious activity both in nominating conventions and in the elections following: Therefore,

Resolved, That a select committee, to consist of seven Senators, be, and the same is hereby, constituted and appointed, whose duty it shall be to examine fully into the present condition of the civil service in all branches of the Government, to ascertain whether the appointments in said service have been based upon merit and qualifications or have been distributed as partisan favors; and further to fully examine and report as to the offensive participation of officers and employés of the General Government in political conventions and elections.

Said committee is hereby authorized to employ a clerk and stenographer, and shall have power to administer oaths, send for persons and papers; to sit in Washington or such other places as may be necessary, and to conduct its investigations through subcommittees, the expenses of the same to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate; and a full report of its proceedings shall be made to the Senate at as early a day as is practicable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I intended to offer an amendment to the resolution. I will not offer it at this time, as the Senator from Maine, I see, desires to make some remarks upon the resolution. I did not know that that was the intention for which it was called up.

Mr. HALE. I will do whatever is agreeable to the Senator.

Mr. COCKRELL. I shall not offer the amendment at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine has the floor.

Mr. HALE. This resolution, Mr. President, has been offered with the sincere purpose of securing such an investigation as will disclose to Congress and to the American people the present condition of the civil service of the Government, and the performances of high and low officials in that service, as bearing upon a subject which, of late years, has assumed in our politics a position of considerable importance.

Since the establishment of the Government of the United States the extent of its civil service has kept pace with the remarkable growth of the country in territory, wealth, and population. All the old Departments have become swollen to an extent never dreamed of by the fathers, and new Departments have been created to meet the wants of the people in doing business with their Government. A hundred questions are passed upon every week by the Federal officials, touching the rights of citizens, the subjects of which had no being when the Government was inaugurated. In the customs, in the public lands, in patents, in the post-office, in the Territories, and in our foreign relations a hundred men are needed to-day to do the work which was formerly done by two or three clerks. All the great business of the internal revenue is a new creation, and the Pension Bureau is a little world of affairs in itself.

With all this has come a vast increase of responsibility, resting primarily upon the head of the Government and upon those who are called by him to preside over the different Departments.

The extent and power of patronage have increased, to the alarm of many thoughtful men. As the years have gone by the American people have seen different changes of administration, and generally the rule has been that each administration during the last fifty years has filled the offices with its political friends. When Abraham Lincoln took the oath of office on the 4th day of March, 1861, I venture to say that the proverbial hunting for a needle in a hay-stack would have been a no more futile effort than would have been the search for a Republican holding office under the General Government. The Democratic party stood as the exponent of the proposition that "to the victors belong the spoils."

During the eventful years that rested with their solemn responsibilities upon Mr. Lincoln's shoulders the vast concerns in which his administration became involved led to an equally vast increase in nearly every branch of the service, and to fill these new places, as well as the old ones, Mr. Lincoln's administration looked to the loyal population of the country in making its appointments. The test was not so much politics as loyalty, and Republicans and war Democrats received appointment and promotion both in the field and in the civil service of the Government. Not a few of these beneficiaries so selected have within the last three years been turned out, in many cases to the charities of a cold world, to make places for those who neither had in the war nor now have any sympathy with the cause that Mr. Lincoln so faithfully represented.

During the time that has elapsed since the war the Republican party has held the reins, with the exception of the few years of Andrew Johnson's troubled and fractious administration, and, with the exception of those years, most appointments in the civil service have been of persons in political sympathy with the administration.

We have all seen that in late years it became a grievance and a scandal in the minds of many sincere, earnest, and patriotic men that appointments should be so made. Civil-service-reform associations took up the subject in all parts of the country and discussed it and formulated their views, demanding reform, which were submitted to the President and to Congress, and to the legislative and executive branches of the governments in different States.

Inseparably connected with this agitation, and, perhaps, in a large degree accounting for the growing sentiment behind it, was the alleged offensive participation of men holding Federal office in the politics of the country. The men and the associations who brought forward this grievance and who abhorred this scandal declared that not only the elections but the primaries and the caucuses which selected candidates to be supported by the different parties were under the manipulation and control of those who were generally known as and called "office-holders." It was proclaimed everywhere by those who urged the reform, and the cry was taken up by Democratic newspapers and orators, that the vast army of men holding office, numbering near a hundred thousand, stood as a menace, and might at any time stifle the expression of the people's voice when a change of administration should be honestly demanded.

Late Republican administrations have recognized the force of this sentiment, and General Grant and President Hayes, during their respective administrations, sought to conform as far as might be with the reasonable demands of this agitation, and during the second session of the Forty-seventh Congress, in 1883, a Republican Congress enacted the statute from which I have quoted in my resolution, which statute was approved by a Republican President and became the law of the land.

President Arthur honestly and faithfully set the machinery of this statute to work, and in all the appointments to the classes covered by its provisions strictly followed its directions. The comparison that I would suggest between President Arthur's course in this matter and the course of his successor is that President Arthur, as in all things in which he engaged, made no proclamation of his superior virtue in starting out, but contented himself with modestly and earnestly doing his duty under the law. He was not clapped and applauded, but none the less he was a practical and earnest civil-service reformer. I have not heard the contrary asserted or claimed. In transmitting the report of the Civil Service Commissioners, February 28, 1884, to Congress he says:

Upon the good result which this law has already accomplished I congratulate Congress and the people, and I avow my conviction that it will henceforth prove to be of still more signal benefit to the public service.

The Republican party, which President Arthur represented, was content to see the operation of the civil-service-reform statute carried out through the land. A noticeable change took place in the construction of its party organizations, both in national and State politics, and all men holding office under the Government or connected in any way with its executive or legislative departments disappeared from its national, State, and local committees, and the management of its organizations through such committees passed into other hands. Like the acts of President Arthur, this was done with no flourish of trumpets, but simply as a tribute of obedience to the spirit of the law which had been enacted.

I have not yet seen any recognition of this action of the leaders of the Republican party from any of the organizations which assume to represent civil-service reform throughout the country.

It is but fair to say for the persons who constituted the civil service of the Federal Government at the time when the statute was enacted that in a vast majority of cases no complaint was made against them; they attended to their duties faithfully; they were good citizens, appreciated by their neighbors and friends. The administration of the Government through their labors had been conducted under one party for nearly twenty-five years with unexampled success. The percentage of deficits, of defalcations and embezzlements and losses to the Government in all its vast transactions had steadily decreased, so that under the last Republican administration the rate of the losses was so small as compared with the corresponding rate in the last Democratic administration that the general charges of inefficiency and corruption were listened to by no well-informed man. It is worth the while here for me to read the tables showing the rates of such losses during the last forty years:

Ratios of Democratic defalcations compared with Republican honesty.

In the great work of the Internal-Revenue Bureau, the astonishing, unexampled spectacle was presented of more than one hundred millions of dollars being collected yearly for seven years, through an army of employés numbering more than five thousand, every dollar of which had been turned into the United States Treasury, not even one cent being lost to the Government.

In the national election in 1884 both parties recognized, in their platforms, civil-service reform. The Republican declaration was straightforward and explicit; that of the Democrats, evasive and meaningless. Here are the two:

[From the Republican platform.]

Reform of the civil service, auspiciously begun under Republican administration, should be completed by the further extension of the reform system, already established by law, to all the grades of the service to which it is applicable. The spirit and purpose of the reform should be observed in all executive appointments, and all laws at variance with the objects of existing reform legislation should be repealed to the end that the dangers to free institutions which lurk in the power of official patronage may be wisely and effectively avoided.

[From the Democratic platform.]

We favor honest civil-service reform.

But as the canvass progressed it was seen that a considerable number of men, who had previously affiliated with the Republican party, were bent upon opposing its candidate, and it gradually became apparent that these men were not only opposing Mr. Blaine and urging their friends to oppose him, but looking about for reasons that would justify them in supporting his opponent, Mr. Cleveland.

The Democratic candidate was not slow to recognize this, and in his letter of acceptance, dated August 18, 1884, he takes occasion to express his belief that the misuse of patronage in the selection of officials who make it their business to interfere improperly in elections should be prevented, even at the expense of an amendment to the Constitution disqualifying the President for re-election. I quote from the letter:

When we consider the patronage of this great office, the allurements of power, the temptation to retain public places once gained, and, more than all, the availability a party finds in an incumbent when a horde of office-holders with a zeal born of benefit received and fostered by the hope of favors yet to come stand ready to aid with money and trained political service, we recognize in the eligibility of the President for re-election a most serious danger to that calm, deliberate, and intelligent political action which must characterize a government by the people.

Warming to his subject, Governor Cleveland, a little further on in the same letter, announced his views as follows:

The people pay the wages of the public employés, and they are entitled to the fair and honest work which the money thus paid should command. It is the duty of those intrusted with the management of these affairs to see that such public service is forthcoming. The selection and retention of subordinates in Government employment should depend upon their ascertained fitness and the value of their work, and they should be neither expected nor allowed to do questionable party service. The interests of the people will be better protected; the estimate of public labor and duty will be immensely improved; public employment will be open to all who can demonstrate their fitness to enter it. The unseemly scramble for place under the Government, with the consequent importunity which embitters official life, will cease, and the public departments will not be filled with those who conceive it to be their first duty to aid the party to which they owe their places instead of rendering patient and honest return to the people.

These utterances are clear and distinct, and may be presumed to have had their effect. The seceders from the Republican party voted the Democratic ticket, and in the close States their numbers were sufficient to decide the result, and Governor Cleveland was elected President. If anybody doubts the moving consideration which impelled this seceding vote in the direction of the Democratic candidate, he has only to read the declarations of the leaders in the civil-service-reform movement made many times since the election.

I am now approaching, Mr. President, the consideration of the course of President Cleveland's administration, elected upon the statements and pledges which I have just quoted. These statements and pledges, in connection with subsequent utterances made by the President, are the foundation for the declaration of Mr. George William Curtis in his address to the annual meeting of the National Civil Service Reform League, held at Newport August 3, 1886, that "President Cleveland is identified in the public mind with the cause of reform."

Subsequent to the election, and previous to his inauguration, on December 25, 1884, Mr. Cleveland, in a letter to Hon. George William Curtis, among other things, enunciates the following propositions as covering his views:

I am not unmindful of the fact to which you refer, that many of our citizens fear that the recent party change in the national Executive may demonstrate that the abuses which have grown up in the civil service are ineradicable. I know that they are deeply rooted and that the spoils system has been supposed to be intimately related to success in the maintenance of party organization, and I am not sure that all those who profess to be the friends of this reform will stand firmly among its advocates when they find it obstructing their way to patronage and place. But fully appreciating the trust committed to my charge, no such consideration shall cause a relaxation on my part of an earnest effort to enforce this law.

If I were addressing none but party friends, I should deem it entirely proper to remind them that, though the coming administration is to be Democratic, a due regard for the people's interest does not permit faithful party work to be always rewarded by appointment to office; and to say to them that while Democrats may expect all proper consideration, selections for office, not embraced within the civil-service rules, will be based upon sufficient inquiry as to fitness, instituted by those charged with that duty, rather than upon persistent importunity or self-solicited recommendations on behalf of candidates for appointment.

In his inaugural address delivered March 4, 1885, the President makes the following declarations of his views as to reform:

The people demand reform in the administration of the Government and the application of business principles to public affairs. As a means to this end, civil-service reform should be in good faith indorsed. Our citizens have the right to protection from the incompetency of public employés who hold their places solely as the reward of partisan service, and from the corrupting influence of those who promise and the vicious methods of those who expect such rewards; and those who worthily seek employment have the right to insist that merit and competency shall be recognized instead of party subserviency or the surrender of honest political belief.

Searching through the President's first annual message to Congress, delivered December 8, 1885, one finds, just before its conclusion, the following reform sentences:

I am inclined to think that there is no sentiment more general in the minds of the people of our country than a conviction of the correctness of the principle upon which the law enforcing civil-service reform is based.

Experience in its administration will probably suggest amendment of the methods of its execution, but I venture to hope that we shall never again be remitted to the system which distributes public positions purely as rewards for partisan service. Doubts may well be entertained whether our Government could survive the strain of a continuation of this system, which upon every change of administration inspires an immense army of claimants for office to lay siege to the patronage of the Government, engrossing the time of public officers with their importunities, spreading abroad the contagion of their disappointment, and filling the air with the tumult of their discontent.

The allurements of an immense number of offices and places exhibited to the voters of the land, and the promise of their bestowal in recognition of partisan activity, debauch the suffrage and rob political action of its thoughtful and deliberative character. The evil would increase with the multiplication of offices consequent upon our extension, and the mania for office-holding, growing from its indulgence, would pervade our population so generally that patriotic purpose, the support of principle, the desire for the public good, and solicitude for the nation's welfare would be nearly banished from the activity of our party contests and cause them to degenerate into ignoble, selfish, and disgraceful struggles for the possession of office and public place.

Civil-service reform enforced by law came none too soon to check the progress of demoralization.

One of its effects, not enough regarded, is the freedom it brings to the political action of those conservative and sober men who, in fear of the confusion and risk attending an arbitrary and sudden change in all the public offices with a change of party rule, cast their ballots against such a change.

Previous to this, on September 11, 1885, in his letter accepting the resignation of Mr. Eaton, the Civil Service Commissioner, the President took occasion to say:

I believe in civil-service reform and its application in the most practicable form attainable, among other reasons because it opens the door for the rich and the poor alike to a participation in public place-holding.

You will agree with me, I think, that the support which has been given to the present Administration in its efforts to preserve and advance this reform by a party restored to power after an exclusion for many years from participation in the places attached to the public service, confronted with a new system precluding the redistribution of such places in its interest, called upon to surrender advantages which a perverted partisanship had taught the American people belonged to success, and perturbed with the suspicion, always raised in such an emergency, that their rights in the conduct of this reform had not been scrupulously regarded, should receive due acknowledgment, and should confirm our belief that there is a sentiment among the people better than a desire to hold office, and a patriotic impulse upon which may safely rest the integrity of our institutions and the strength and perpetuity of our Government.

In a personal interview published in the Boston Herald January 30, 1885, the President makes the following epigrammatic utterances:

No, I have tried to be true to my own pledges and the pledges of my party. We both promised to divorce the offices of the country from being used for party service. I have held to my promise, and I mean to hold to it.

Also the following:

What I understand by civil-service reform, as I am carrying it out, is that the office-holders shall be divorced from politics while they fill their positions under this Government. This rule I have meant to stand by.

Here, Mr. President, we have an administration pledged as strongly as words can pledge it to the cause of civil-service reform. It was an administration elected, as Mr. Curtis has said, because of such pledges and the faith that was based upon them. To the vision of the reformer a brighter and better day was dawning in American politics. Appointments to office were to be made on the Jeffersonian plan of fitness and character. There were to be no more sweeping removals. Nobody was to behold the spectacle of a horde of hungry office-seekers besieging the capital upon a change of administration. The affairs of the Government were to be conducted upon business principles. The office-holders were to be "the servants of the people and not their masters." They were to be "divorced from politics." They were not to seek to control conventions and elections. We were to have a "pure, non-partisan civil service."

Let us now see, Mr. President, how these high-sounding pledges have been kept. Mr. Curtis declares that they attracted a sufficient number of independent voters to the standard of the Democratic party to elect its President. If this be so it is worth the while to bring to the minds of these "independent" men and to the attention of the country the real condition of affairs since the Democratic party, after gaining possession of the Government through the pledges of its candidate, came into full power.

Before going to this, Mr. President, I wish it distinctly understood that in any arraignment which I may make of the present Administration touching its appointments and the participation of civil officers of the Government under it in politics I am uttering no complaint in the interests of Republicans who have been removed from Federal offices. These men have made no complaint, and will make none. In common with other Senators upon this side of the Chamber, I have made no attempt to retain them in office. Indeed, Mr. President, notwithstanding the platform of the Democratic party and the declarations and pledges of its candidate, I have never expected much less than a clean sweep at the hands of the Democratic party; for if there is anything that the leaders of that party and its masses believe in and mean to maintain it is the doctrine that "to the victors belong the spoils;" and, Mr. President, it was not only that Mr. Cleveland was elected President in November, 1884; but what was of much more importance to the country, the Democratic party, which Mr. Curtis declared was both "hungry and thirsty for office," was set up in power.

The man is blind who does not see to-day that the spirit of that party upon the question of the distribution of the "spoils" is as powerful, as controlling, as dominant as it ever was in the days of Polk or Pierce or Buchanan. This is what, as we have all seen, has brought the President and party leaders together. This is what has made Senators, who two years ago denounced and derided the President because of his "impracticable civil-service reform theories," his advocates and apostles to-day. It is not that they have yielded, but that he has yielded.

Whatever may have been the President's intention in the beginning, however honestly he may have intended to carry out his many declarations for reform, the pressure from his party has been too great; the spoilsmen have captured the Administration, and now their talk is of nothing but the renomination and re-election of the President.

If the fond dream ever possessed the mind of the civil-service reformer that under President Cleveland the Democratic party was to be transformed into a civil-service-reform party, that reformer has seen the baseless fabric of his dream vanish in a rude awakening.

I invite the attention of these gentlemen to the following table, which was carefully made up to June 11, 1887, more than six months ago, from figures furnished by the Department, as showing how sweeping had been the change in all of the departments of the Government up to that date:

| Offices. | Places filled by Cleveland. | Whole number of places. |
|---|---|---|
| Presidential postmasters (estimated) | 2,000 | 2,359 |
| Fourth-class postmasters (estimated) | 40,000 | 52,609 |
| Foreign ministers | 32 | 33 |
| Secretaries of legation | 16 | 21 |
| Consuls | 138 | 219 |
| Collectors of customs | 100 | 111 |
| Surveyors of customs | 33 | 33 |
| Naval officers of customs | 6 | 6 |
| Appraisers, all grades | 34 | 36 |
| Superintendents of mints and assayers | 11 | 13 |
| Assistant treasurers at subtreasuries | 9 | 9 |
| Collectors of internal revenue | 84 | 85 |
| Inspectors of steam-vessels | 8 | 11 |
| District attorneys | 65 | 70 |
| Marshals | 64 | 70 |
| Territorial judges | 22 | 30 |
| Territorial governors | 9 | 9 |
| Pension agents | 16 | 18 |
| Surveyors-general | 16 | 16 |
| Local land officers | 190 | 224 |
| Indian inspectors and special agents | 9 | 10 |
| Indian agents | 51 | 59 |
| Special agents, General Land Office | 79 | 83 |
| Total | 42,992 | 56,134 |

Mr. SAULSBURY. Allow me to ask whether those changes were all removals?

Mr. HALE. The Senator will take notice that I am speaking of changes. I am coming afterwards to speak of the method of the changes.

At the time to which this table comes the present Administration had been a little more than two years in power.

The best comment, Mr. President, upon this remarkable table that I can make is to quote the editorial headings of a leading Democratic newspaper, when it exultingly published this sweeping list. Here they are: "The civil service;" "Practical exclusion of Republicans from employment under the National Government;" "Only a small class of public servants protected by the Pendleton act;" "The changes effected with as little derangement of business as possible;" "Spoilsmen not satisfied."

Not "satisfied," Mr. President, till they should have secured possession of the small fraction of offices remaining in Republican hands in June last. Since that time a large portion of the places represented by this small fraction have been filled by Democrats, and I hope in a few days to have the figures which will show how almost complete and exhaustive have been the changes.

This showing, Mr. President, is most amazing. I was not aware of the extent of the change till I looked up the figures; the country has not known or appreciated it. Certain incidents connected with these changes are startling. It can not be said in defense of the President and his party that in most cases the changes were made because of the expiration of the terms of the incumbents or of their resignations. In a very great majority of all these cases, probably nineteen-twentieths of all, the civil officers removed held under no fixed tenure of office, being removable at the pleasure of the President. So far as resignations go, they have been comparatively few, and, in nine cases out of ten, have been extorted under the threat of removal.

In the great Bureau of Internal Revenue, out of eighty-five collectors eighty-four had been removed on June 11, and the other, I believe, has gone since. Not one of these held under a fixed term of office which had expired. The same is true of that large number of officials who are employed in the Indian service as inspectors, in the Land Office, in the Pension Office, in the mints, and in the judiciary of the Territories.

It is true of that great army of small officials who are known as fourth-class postmasters; and this class and its treatment deserve some special comment. This class includes the postmasters in the smaller towns and villages and cross-roads throughout all the States and Territories. They represent, more than any other class, the men whose official duties bring them into direct relation and communication with the people. They are, in most cases, poorly paid, and do their own work. Scarcely one of these places can be called a sinecure, and yet such has been the greed of the local Democratic politician for some kind of office that, out of fifty-two thousand six hundred and nine places in this class, forty thousand, as near as the estimate can be made, or as the Postmaster-General, in his report, makes it, between thirty-six and thirty-seven thousand, had been removed up to the early part of last June. I do not believe to-day, Mr. President, that ten thousand of the old incumbents in this class remain in office. What is more to the point, I do not believe that out of those that are left three thousand are Republicans, or that, from all those that have been newly appointed, one hundred are Republicans. The Nasbys and the Bascoms and the Gavits of the Democratic party have been put into these places by this civil-service-reform administration.

No man can say, out of this vast mass of patronage, how many local Democratic strikers, who have come to Washington seeking high places in the Government and have gradually beheld their hopes fading, have seen their application strained down from one grade to another till at last they have rested content as a fourth-class Democratic reform postmaster in a grocery in some country corner.

I commend this list to the special attention of the gentlemen of the civil-service-reform associations who still cling to the fond hope that Mr. Cleveland is a reform President. Not one of these removals could have taken place if he had forbidden it. Indeed, between the adjournment of Congress and his departure for the Adirondack Mountains the President appointed two hundred and fifty-three postmasters, of whom but one was appointed to succeed himself and ninety-one were appointed to succeed postmasters who were removed.

The difference between word and deed is clearly shown in the case of Secretary Lamar, who took occasion in April last to commend John C. Calhoun for his opposition to the spoils system, and to congratulate himself upon belonging to an Administration that was engaged in carrying out the policy that Calhoun advocated.

The stern facts are that in the service over which Mr. Lamar has presided every Territorial governor has been removed; sixteen out of eighteen pension agents; every single surveyor-general; four-fifths of the local land officers; nine-tenths of the inspectors and special agents of the Indian service; fifty-one out of fifty-nine Indian agents; seventy-nine out of eighty-three special agents of the General Land Office, and more than two-thirds of the special examiners of the Pension Office. But Secretary Lamar to-day stands on record as against the spoils system, and takes high rank as a reformer.

If I were not consuming too much time, Mr. President, I could select from the figures which are before me other Departments of the Government, not covered by the table which I have presented, showing this conquering march of the Democratic party in pursuit of the offices.

In all the Departments in Washington are found able and honest men, who have given their lives to the service of the Government. They have begun as clerks in the lower grades and have been steadily promoted until they have at last reached the highest places to which they may reasonably aspire. They were found, when the reform Democratic administration came into power, as chief clerks and chiefs of divisions. They made the eyes and ears of the Departments, and, one would suppose, should be considered as almost indispensable. In the Treasury Department there are seventy-nine chief clerks and chiefs of divisions, and up to June, 1887, sixty-six of these seventy-nine had been changed. In not more than a half a dozen cases the person appointed was a promoted clerk. The introduction into this force was almost entirely from the outside. Every deputy auditor, deputy comptroller, and deputy commissioner of internal revenue has been changed. In many cases chiefs of divisions have been reduced in grade, and new men, from the outside world, of the Democratic party, have been appointed. In more than one case the head of a division has been reduced to a lower clerkship and the Democratic politician has been appointed in his place, and the old incumbent, in his reduced grade and at his reduced pay, is performing all his old work, and the new incumbent does practically nothing. But this is civil-service reform.

Mr. President, there is but one thing about this showing that can be offensive to my friends on the other side of the Chamber whose constituents are following them in frantic pursuit for the offices. There are still here and there a few places worth the holding remaining in the hands of Republicans who, instead of "fixing conventions" and mustering the voters at the polls, are attending to the duties of their office; but these cases I must remind my friends are few and all the while becoming less and less.

My friend from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] has seen to it that out of thirty-nine Presidential post-offices in his State but one holds over. I am not sure that he, perhaps the "late postmaster" at Somerset, has not gone.

My brilliant friend from Missouri [Mr. VEST], in association with his indefatigable colleague [Mr. COCKRELL], has looked to it that out of seventy-nine Presidential post-offices in his State seventy-five were changed. Either of these Senators can tell better than I whether since October 28, to which time my figures come down, either of the other four has been allowed to stay.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], who marshals his party in the national elections, has been a little more forbearing in his treatment of the post-offices, for, in late October, I find that four of these places remained unchanged. Possibly this may have been in view of the coming election; since when reform may have exhausted itself by completing the sweep. But he has looked more carefully after the Federal offices under the Secretary of the Treasury, as every Presidential appointment, from collectors of the ports down to local appraisers, has been changed with the exception of the collector of customs at Annapolis.

My friend from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM], who will have all the Presidential postmasters in his State, as I hope, in his Senatorial race next year, has quietly proceeded to have every one of them changed, at which none of us, of late, have heard any grumblings from his colleague [Mr. VANCE] as to the impracticable theories of the Administration.

South Carolina, out of eighteen Presidential post-offices, had in October but one holding over, and all of the customs and internal-revenue officers in that State are new.

Louisiana has twelve Presidential post-offices, all being new appointees.

Indiana, under the charge of the eloquent Democratic Senator from that State [Mr. VOORHEES], has not been forgotten, and out of eighty-seven Presidential post-offices only those at Crown Point, Goshen, and Union City remained in October unchanged.

The Florida Senators must be surprised to learn that one Republican postmaster was left at Eustis, out of seventeen Presidential post-offices. I commend this accidental escape to their immediate attention.

How it has happened that in Delaware, with but six Presidential post-offices, a Republican postmaster still holds at Newark is an anomalous condition yet to be explained.

In the Northern States where there are no Democratic Senators and but few Representatives in the other branch of Congress, somebody has been equally effective in the cause of reform.

Colorado has twenty-eight Presidential post-offices, only two of which remained unchanged in October.

Iowa has one hundred and twenty-four Presidential post-offices, and of these seven remained unchanged.

Kansas has one hundred and ten Presidential post-offices, and out of these the postmasters at Augusta, Cawker City, Frankfort, Hays City, Humboldt, and Lindsborg have escaped the ax.

In my own State, out of thirty Presidential post-offices, five remained unchanged at the date already given.

In Massachusetts the Democratic party has maintained an indifferent, and indeed sullen, attitude toward the Administration, because of the fact that out of one hundred and twenty-six Presidential post-offices twenty-three, up to the date of the last election, remained in the hands of Republicans.

In Michigan, out of one hundred and six Presidential post-offices, fourteen remain.

In Minnesota, out of fifty-one, six remain.

In Nebraska, out of seventy, six remain.

In New Hampshire two Republicans, out of thirty-two Presidential post-offices, remain as spared monuments of mercy.

In New York, out of two hundred and nineteen Presidential post-offices, forty-seven remain in Republican hands, or did previous to the last election.

This is not so bad a showing, after all, in the cause of reform, and for the further satisfaction of my friends upon the other side of the Chamber, and for the encouragement of the average Democratic politician in the country, I am glad to be able to say that the Administration has lost no vigor in this work of removal. Indeed, wherever an examination has been made, showing the rate of changes from month to month, it has been discovered that although the number of removals to be made is less the percentage of change is constantly increasing.

The Civil Service Record, of Boston, a good authority upon this subject, not long ago investigated the unclassified service in the Interior Department, and reports the rapidity with which the changes have been made, as follows: "On October 1, 1886, the percentage of changes was 71; on January 1, 1887, the percentage was 78½; on July 1, 1887, the percentage was 90."

At this rate it can be easily seen that the remaining small percentage will soon be removed. The cry of "Kill, kill," as in the massacre of St. Bartholomew's day, grows louder as the number of victims increases.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. I ask whether in the statement as to Presidential postoffices the Senator allows for the number of new appointees by reason of the expiration of term? I know that in my own State, where there are but a small number of Presidential post-offices, every one of the changes was made to fill a vacancy caused by the expiration of the term of office.

Mr. HALE. There are tables which show that. Every Senator can see for himself, as to Presidential post-offices running for four years of time as their term of office, that in two years of an administration, upon the doctrine of averages, the term of one-half might expire. I have been giving the record in these States where, instead of one-half of the number of postmasters being changed, the proportion ranges from five-sixths to nineteen-twentieths, or to a complete change, so that whatever may be the fact in Delaware—and that I did not comment on—the Senator himself must see that removals accelerate these changes beyond what would naturally occur on the doctrine of averages.

Mr. GRAY. I do not understand that the Senator insists that the President has done wrong in filling post-offices which became vacant by the expiration of the term of the incumbent.

Mr. HALE. I have said before that I did not claim that all of these changes had been by removals; but a significant fact attending the pledges and promises of this civil-service-reform Administration is that as the terms have expired not one in five hundred of the old incumbents has been reappointed. It goes without saying, and nobody raises a question, that their successors will always be Democrats, notwithstanding the President has said that he will not encourage a horde of office-seekers to besiege the Departments of the Government and his door for rewards for partisan work.

I have just given the instance, which the Senator did not hear, that in the little space of time between the adjournment of Congress and the Presidential visit to the Adirondack Mountains, out of two hundred and fifty-three Presidential appointments that were made ninety-one were to fill offices vacated by removals, and only one of a man to succeed himself.

Mr. GRAY. What officers were they?

Mr. HALE. Postmasters.

Let us now, Mr. President, turn to the other side of this subject of reform in the civil service, that which relates to the offensive participation of office-holders in politics. That this should not be permitted in any well-regulated civil service goes without saying. The President saw this clearly, and his utterances in relation to it are as clear and distinct as they were upon appointments and removals.

I have already quoted from his letter of acceptance, in which he deprecated the existence of "a horde of office-holders, with a zeal born of benefit received, and fostered by the hope of favors yet to come, who stand ready to aid with money and trained political services" the party to which they belong. And we have seen further his declarations, after assuming his high office, of the things which he believed to constitute a true civil-service reform, namely:

The separation of the offices from politics, the non-participation of office-holders in elections and conventions.

During the first year of the President's administration, and as the time approached for the campaign which preceded the State and Congressional elections in 1886, it was discovered that things were going on in the Democratic party very much after its old fashion. The men in office were "manipulating conventions," "fixing nominations," and taking upon themselves the conduct of the campaign generally. So apparent was this in Maryland, in Indiana, in Kentucky, in New York, in Pennsylvania, and in other contested States, that a voice of complaint was heard, not from the Democrats, who desired this condition of things, nor from the Republicans, who expected it, but from the "Independents," who had contributed to the President's election, and who now were fain to admit that matters were not going to suit them.

The President was ready, as usual, with letters of assurances and with proclamations tending to appease the discontent of his "Independent" allies.

The statute which I have recited in the resolution upon which I am speaking is definitive and explicit in its terms, and its passage by a Republican Congress and approval by a Republican President, as I have said, was followed by a complete change in the organization of the party, all men holding Federal office disappearing from its committees and staff of political workers.

On the 14th day of July, 1886, the President issued his famous order from the Executive Mansion in Washington, "To the heads of the Departments in the service of the General Government." As this whole proclamation has been read from the desk of the Secretary, I will not here take up the time of the Senate by repeating it. In it the President declares that his purpose is "to warn all subordinates in the several Departments and all office-holders under the General Government, against the use of their official positions in attempts to control political movements in their localities." In it he declares that "office-holders are the agents of the people—not their masters." In it he warns Federal officials against "offending, by a display of obtrusive partisanship, their neighbors who have relations with them as public officials." In it he declares that "they have no right as office-holders to dictate the political action of their party associates." In it he declares that the duty of the office-holder to his party is not "increased to pernicious activity by office-holding."

These plain declarations of the President form a policy under which, if properly followed, the civil service of the country would indeed be divorced from politics. The Independents felt this, and, taking new courage from the President's declarations, and forgetting how far the performance had fallen short of his promises in appointments and removals, still clung, in many cases, to the Democratic organization.

The Civil Service Commissioners, or at least two of them, interpreted the statute in accordance with the President's instruction, and this added weight to the Executive direction. But the leaders and the masses of the Democratic party felt by this time that they clearly understood the situation, and at this point begins to be clearly marked the change of tone among these leaders in their comments upon the President. They realized fully that in view of coming elections the party must ride two horses; that the President was to steadily maintain in all his public declarations the cause of civil-service reform, with the view of retaining the support of the Independents; but that, as in the case of appointments and removals, no real obstruction was to be placed in the way of any and every office-holder participating, whenever he chose, in caucuses and conventions and in the elections which followed.

Whether the advantages to be derived from this double presentation first became clearly discernible to the President's eye or to the eyes of his party leaders is not a matter of importance. The beauties of the situation, to a party which had straddled and presented two fronts upon almost every great question before the people, were at once apparent, and the President and his party, while speaking in different voices, were at once reconciled and came to bed together.

The conventions in the different States and in the Congressional districts at once fell under the old management, and were conducted as in the palmy days of Democracy, previous to the war.

In the Indiana election, in November, 1886, the participation of Federal office-holders in the primaries and subsequently in the election raised a scandal of which papers in that State, at the time and afterwards, were full. In the closely-contested districts these men left their business and their homes and devoted themselves to securing the nomination and election of the members to whom they had owed their appointments. In the Matson district, in the Holman district, and especially in the Fort Wayne district the intrusion of Federal office-holders into every stage of the canvass previous to the nominating conventions and elections was so offensive that honest people revolted and defeated the Democratic candidate. Whoever will read the testimony offered in the Lowry-White contested-election case will find ample proof of this statement.

When 1887 came round the President's declarations and proclamations were treated as waste-paper, and the President himself seems by this time to have fallen into such harmony with the spirit of his party that he not only acquiesced in this wholesale disregard of his previously expressed sentiments and directions, but himself joined in the movement. His most intimate friends, both in and out of office, took charge of the conduct of conventions and elections in the year which was considered as having so close a bearing in its results upon the great coming battle of 1888.

At the Saratoga meeting of the Democratic State committee of New York, when the preliminaries of what then looked like the dawning contest between the national Administration and the State administration were to be settled, Deputy Collector John A. Mason and Second Auditor William F. Creed, of the New York custom-house, were most prominent and active.

At the Pennsylvania State convention more than forty of the Federal officials of that State appeared to marshal the forces of the Administration. The names of some of these have been furnished me as taken from a Democratic newspaper: E. J. Bigler, collector of internal revenue; D. O. Barr, surveyor of the port of Pittsburgh; McVey and Ryan, special Treasury agents; Fletcher, chief clerk in a bureau of the Navy Department; Glozier, hull inspector; Guss, oleomargarine inspector; Chester and Warren and Bancroft, from the Philadelphia mint, and many others.

In Baltimore the naval officer, the appointment clerk, Higgins, and Indian Inspector Thomas, Customs Agent Mahon, Postmaster Brown and his assistant, United States marshal and deputies, deputy collector of internal revenue, and a host of clerks, inspectors, and janitors monopolized the direction of the entire campaign.

I might go on and give like instances in other States, but I leave that to be more fully brought out by the committee which I hope will take this matter in charge.

Mr. HAWLEY. May I make an inquiry?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. Is the Senator certain that these men have not been indignantly and virtuously removed?

Mr. HALE. Not only have I yet to learn of a removal for such action, but I have yet to learn of any censure being visited upon one of these men. I do not know of a case where the President has put his strong hand upon these men and made it seen that he meant to perform what he had promised. In fact, so gross was the violation of every principle of reform and of the President's directions and pledges that even the Evening Post declared that "this playing fast and loose with orders and promises, which the President is now permitting among those around him, will be used in the campaign with terrible effect."

But the President has not hesitated to deal deadly blows at reform with his own hand. A remarkable manifestation of the desire of the people for a practical reform in the selection of important officers was shown in the city of New York previous to the last election. Public suspicion had for a long time rested upon officials in the municipal government, and had at last demanded and secured an investigation, which disclosed the most corrupt and shocking practices on the part of municipal officials, implicating them and well-known parties outside in extensive schemes involving corruption and bribery.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator from Maine will be allowed to go on.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the Senator from Maine be permitted to conclude his speech.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the unfinished business being informally laid aside, that the Senator from Maine may proceed? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HALE. Public indignation, expressed through almost the entire press of New York, was aroused, the intervention of the courts was sought, and from time to time trials of the accused had proceeded in some cases to conviction of the criminals. The work was by no means completed, and as the time for the election of a district attorney who should represent the State and the public in the conduct of these trials came near a pronounced and general movement grew up in favor of the selection of Mr. Delancy Nicoll, an able and brilliant young Democratic lawyer, who had found thrown upon him, as an assistant in the district attorney's office, the burden of largely managing and conducting the hitherto successful prosecution of these cases.

Nobody claimed that the movement for Mr. Nicoll had its origin in any party preference. It came from the people, and the demand was taken up by the newspapers. With few exceptions the Republican, Democratic, and Independent press demanded the nomination and election of Mr. Nicoll in the interest of reform and good government. He was nominated by different independent organizations, indorsed by all of the civil-service-reform associations and newspapers, and, although a Democrat, accepted generally by the Republicans.

Here was a plain, spontaneous, earnest, honest movement on the part of the people in the direction of reform. It would seem to have been political wit on the part of the Democratic managers in New York City to have accepted this movement and to have joined in the election of a man who had always been a Democrat, but whose character and services were so high that good men demanded generally that he should be retained in the public service. But, as I have said, long before this the Democratic leaders had found that in the practical management of politics they were in the saddle, and the nominating conventions of the two branches of the New York Democracy joined in rejecting Mr. Nicoll and in setting up as his opponent an old-fashioned, worn, bruised, and battered New York City politician, whose personal character was not high, and who had been a crony of and a beneficiary at the hands of Tweed in the worst days of New York City's corruptions.

The business men of New York, the Independents, the Reformers, and Republicans generally accepted the issue, and a contest almost unequaled in intensity and bitterness ensued. Here, Senators, was the opportunity for the President not only to say but to do something for reform. If, in accordance with his declarations in favor of non-interference of Federal office-holders in elections, he had, including himself as the head of all Federal official life, determined to keep aloof from the contest, he still might in many ways have breathed expressions giving aid and comfort to the men in New York City who were fighting against thieves and robbers and bribe-takers and bribe-givers in the interest of good government. All of the so-called Reform element in New York City that had hitherto adhered to the President looked to him for some such expression. How bitterly were they disappointed! The President was now completely in the hands of the party leaders in New York, whose stern rule had always been to support regular nominations and to shoot down bolters and deserters.

While the contest was at its thickest, and men everywhere throughout the country turned their eyes expectantly upon the result, and when the battle had become one of national importance, and when the issues were, seemingly, well-nigh evenly balanced, a great Tammany Hall ratification meeting was held in the interest of Mr. Fellows, the Tammany Hall and County Democratic candidate for district attorney in opposition to Mr. Nicoll. I have before me a full report of the proceedings of this meeting and of the parties who participated therein. Their names have not been found upon the lists of any civil-service-reform association heretofore made known to the public. General John Cochrane called the meeting to order; Congressman S. S. COX presided. State Senator Raines, of Monroe, was followed by the candidate, Colonel Fellows, and Hon. Charles A. Dana, editor of The Sun. Speeches were also made by George Blair and Congressman WILLIAM MCADOO, of New Jersey. The following letter was read:

It will be impossible for me to comply with your courteous invitation to meet with those who propose to ratify to-morrow evening the nomination of the united Democracy. With a hearty wish that every candidate on your excellent ticket may be triumphantly elected,

I am, yours, very truly,

GROVER CLEVELAND.

Mr. VEST. I beg the Senator's pardon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HALE. I wish he would let me finish.

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. However, I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. VEST. I did not propose to say a word, but the Senator has attacked a gentleman with whom my personal and political relations are such that I should esteem myself a dastard if I did not say what I propose to say now.

The Senator has spoken of Col. John R. Fellows as an old New York politician with a character none too high, to quote his own language, and he has not intimated, but has charged, in so many words, that his candidacy was in the interest of corrupt men and corrupt objects in the city of New York.

Now, Mr. President, I want to ask that Senator—for this surpasses the bounds of political debate and enters upon that of personal character—I want to ask him here, publicly, if Mr. Nicoll, the opponent of Colonel Fellows, whom he has eulogized here to-day as the representative of reform and honesty, did not in the heat of that contest address a letter to Colonel Fellows, and authorize its publication in all the newspapers of New York City, in which he stated that he had been associated with Colonel Fellows in the prosecution of Sharp and the other men who were alleged to be criminals, and that as a gentleman he took that occasion to say publicly that no man at the New York bar stood higher than Col. John R. Fellows, and that he took that occasion to testify that in those prosecutions Colonel Fellows had done all that could be done by any man of the same ability? Yet, in the face of that letter, Colonel Fellows is denounced here to-day as a participant in the criminal intents of those men, some of whom are fugitives from justice, and others are in the State penitentiary.

Mr. HALE. I have no knowledge personally of either of the candidates in that most important contest.

Mr. VEST. I ask if that letter was not published? If not, I will have it read in the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I have no doubt whatever about the letter; there were many incidents in that campaign upon one side and the other. One thing came out clearly, and that was that whatever personal attachment might have been felt for the Tammany and County Democracy candidate on the part of friends who had known him in late years and in earlier years, he had been connected by close personal ties and had been the beneficiary of contributions at the hands of Tweed in the time which I have before characterized as the worst of New York's corrupt days; that he was old in political service; that, as I have said, his character stood none too high. I repeat that the impression which I received from reading the papers upon both sides at that time justified me in that remark, without intending any assault upon Colonel Fellows. But I do not propose to leave it there. If the Senator had not interrupted me I was going on further to give testimony from parties in New York about the effect of the indorsement by the President of this man upon men who were honestly fighting for good government. Let me continue the reading where I was interrupted. I have read the letter of Grover Cleveland.

The report of the meeting further says that Governor Hill wrote that a previous engagement prevented his attendance, and said a good word for the Democratic State and local tickets, and that William M. Springer, of Illinois, telegraphed to Colonel Fellows that he hoped that he would be elected, as did also Senator GORMAN, of Maryland.

The "Reformers," Mr. President, were out in great force that night. The extent of the President's contribution in money to the election of the New York ticket I am not aware of. It has been stated to have been in the form of a check for $1,000, and I have never seen the statement denied.

Of this attitude of the President Mr. Carl Schurz said, only a few days later:

What malignant enemy of President Cleveland was it that induced Mr. Cooper to extort from him that most unfortunate letter intermeddling in New York City politics on the side of the typical "dead-beat"—

I was careful to use no such language as this—as a candidate for an office which is the guardian of the public honor?

I leave the Senator from Missouri to deal with Mr. Carl Schurz in the selection he has made of the terms that he applies to the candidate whom the Reformers were striving to beat. I do not select a vocabulary of such words as these, because I know nothing whatever about Colonel Fellows. The Senator must settle with Mr. Schurz, who has lived for years in New York, who has been in sympathy with him and his party, and who to-day, for aught I know, still represents the feeling of adherence to President Cleveland as a reformer.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir.

Mr. VEST. The Senator has certainly seen, whether a professional lawyer or not, that when one puts a witness upon the stand he must indorse his general character for truth and veracity, in a political sense certainly. Now he brings forward Mr. Schurz as a witness in this case. If what Mr. Schurz says about Colonel Fellows is entitled to any credibility, to any weight whatever, what weight is to be given to what he has said of the party to which the Senator belongs and all of its leaders?

I am not responsible for what Mr. Schurz has said. The State of Missouri, of which he and myself were once citizens at the same time, has passed upon Mr. Schurz politically, and I was never his friend in any sense of the term. When the Senator from Maine produces Mr. Schurz here as a witness he must take all his declarations; and he has never said one-half as much against Colonel Fellows as he has said against all the distinguished leaders of the Republican party.

Mr. HALE. I am not here espousing or defending the record of Mr. Carl Schurz.

Mr. VEST. Then the Senator ought not to put him on the stand as a witness.

Mr. HALE. Wait a moment; as a lawyer I have gone into the other side, into their camp, and from their array of witnesses I have put him upon the stand; and the Senator, who is a good lawyer, knows that no court ever holds that a party calling up a witness under such circumstances and conditions is responsible for the record of that witness who is extracted from the array that the other side has set up. That is how I am quoting Mr. Carl Schurz.

Mr. VEST. Is not Mr. Carl Schurz a Republican?

Mr. HALE. I have seen nothing to indicate it for a number of years.

Mr. VEST. I positively and distinctly affirm that he is not a Democrat.

Mr. HALE. Well, Mr. President, if acting in association with the Democratic party, writing and talking in favor of its candidate, if voting for it on election day, and advocating all its cardinal propositions and doctrines do not make a man a Democrat, then the Senator from Missouri must furnish a list of qualifications which we will all declare at once entitle a man to full fellowship in that party. The Senator has had a good deal of Mr. Carl Schurz in the last few years, and is very likely to have still more of him, notwithstanding his repudiation of him now. At any rate, Mr. Schurz was entitled to speak upon this canvass, and upon the issue, and upon the candidates. Now let me read what he says:

What malignant enemy of President Cleveland was it that induced Mr. Cooper—to extort from him that most unfortunate letter intermeddling in New York city politics on the side of the typical "dead-beat" as a candidate for an office which is the guardian of the public honor? If the President had had a true friend in your councils that friend would have strained every nerve to confirm his disinclination to descend from the high dignity of his office; that friend would not have failed to remind him of 1882, when the meddling of the national administration with New York State politics resulted in the most sweeping opposition victory on record; that friend would have struggled to the bitter end against the publication of the President's letter after the new revelations concerning Mr. Fellows's career, in ignorance of which, I have no doubt, that letter was written, and after learning which I trust he would wish it never had been written.

I shall say nothing in extenuation of the fact that the President permitted himself to be so misused. But certain it is that the bitterest enemies of the President and of the Democratic party could not have dealt them a more vicious blow. For more than thirty years I have been an attentive observer of political events, and never, never have I witnessed more wanton recklessness of party leaders, sacrificing the interests and good name of a great municipality, the character of a national administration, as well as the interests of their party and cause, to their blundering folly or their small selfishness.

To set at rest in Mr. Schurz's mind the question which he raises as to the President's interference being deliberate and determined I read the following letter, which likewise appeared and was used in this remarkable campaign:

NEW YORK, November 4.

Ex-Mayor Edward Cooper has received the following letter from President Cleveland:

"EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, November 2, 1887.

"MY DEAR SIR: I do not think the newspaper clippings you send and now before me amount to enough to even raise a doubt concerning my desire for the success of both the State and the New York local tickets in the coming election. You know that I am very much inclined to abstain from any interference with New York City campaigns, fully believing the people of that city to be quite competent to manage their affairs. It surely ought not to be considered any interference, however, when I say in reply to your letter that the newspaper extracts which you inclose totally misrepresent my wishes and hopes in regard to the fate of your Democratic local ticket. I shall be very much pleased to see it entirely successful. I know nothing which, if I were a voter in New York, would prevent my support of Mr. Fellows's candidacy without the least misgivings as to his fitness and with considerable personal satisfaction. Please present my congratulations to Mr. Hewitt upon his excellent letter published this morning.

"Yours, very truly,

"GROVER CLEVELAND.

"Hon. EDWARD COOPER."

In Massachusetts, where removals from office, though numerous and covering nearly all the important appointments, were not so sweeping as in other States, dissatisfaction existed in the Democratic party, which plainly manifested itself in the State convention. The President's appointments were criticised, the retention of a few Republicans in office was denounced, the platform was made to suit the spoilsmen, and instead of renominating Mr. Andrew, who had to some extent represented the Reformers, in heading the Democratic ticket last year ex-Congressman Lovering was set up in his place, and the convention adjourned with a howl against reform and with the avowed purpose of getting along without and snubbing the Reformers. So plain was the purpose and the bias of the Democratic party in the State that hundreds, perhaps thousands, of the so-called Independents who had voted the Democratic ticket in the last Presidential election determined to withhold their votes from Mr. Lovering, and in the end many of those votes were cast for Governor Ames, his competitor.

The President did not fail here to add to the discomfiture of his Independent allies. When Collector Saltonstall, who visited Washington a few days previous to the elections, where he had several interviews with the President, returned to Boston, he declared in an interview, which gave great hopes to the Democratic politicians of Massachusetts, that he had in his interviews with the President found him "to be a very close observer of events and thoroughly informed concerning the issues of the campaign in the State." He said that "the President spoke in terms of praise of Mr. Lovering, whom he considered a perfectly honest man, who would make a good governor, and he hoped to see him elected;" and he declared that—

Notwithstanding the attack in the Worcester convention upon the Federal management of offices in Massachusetts, he had no doubt that the Massachusetts Democracy were in full accord with himself and his administration, and he hoped this might be proven by a majority the next Tuesday in favor of Mr. Lovering.

It is to the credit of the Massachusetts Independents that this indorsement by the President of candidate Lovering availed little; but nothing could have more plainly shown the entire abandonment on the part of the President of the positions he had previously taken in favor of divorcing the civil service of the Government from politics.

Mr. President, I decline to go further in this direction. No observations of mine are needed upon such a showing. Peter Bayne, in his new Life of Martin Luther, after describing the slaughter and destruction of the peasants' army at the hands of the armed horsemen who rode in upon them, says that "upon some things all comment is drowned in tears." If it were not for the sadder consideration of broken promises and pledges that had come to naught, though made from the highest place in the land, all comment upon the record which I have tried fairly, though succeeding but inadequately, to give would be drowned in derision.

There is nobody, Mr. President, who is pleased with this situation. There is nobody that enjoys such an exposure. The Senator from Missouri, the Senator from Kentucky, the Senator from Maryland do not enjoy it, because at the bottom of their hearts they believe that the old-fashioned Democratic way, without the pretension of anything to the contrary, is the best way of conducting a government.

Mr. Schurz, and Mr. Curtis, and Mr. Dorman B. Eaton, and the select body of Independents who are ranked with them in sentiment upon this subject do not enjoy this. Not one of these men who possesses ordinary discernment can fail to see that the whole course of this Administration on this subject has been a delusion and a sham. With them the searching question that each man must put to himself will now be, "How long shall I be constrained to minister to and uphold this delusion, this sham?"

The President himself, who, I am bound to believe, is not a born hypocrite, does not enjoy this condition. His only satisfaction must be that he is getting more clearly in line with his party and its leaders and the sentiments of its masses, and that in the time to come he will be called on to make no more professions.

Another subject closely connected with this question and specially provided for in the statute is that of assessments for political purposes imposed upon the officers, clerks, and employés of the Government. The whole course of the Republican party upon this was thoroughly gone over in the debate which arose here in the Forty-seventh Congress, in which the distinguished gentleman now our minister at the German court, then a prominent member of this body and the author of the Pendleton civil-service bill, took part.

In that debate the course of the Republican party was most fully justified, and it was shown clearly that whatever contributions had been made by officials, clerks, and employés of the Government toward maintaining the organization and conducting the campaigns of the party had been voluntary, and that no exactions had been laid and no threats or coercion resorted to to enforce contributions. The amount derived from all these sources in a single year was small compared with the entire expenses involved in a political campaign. But, Mr. President, a great hue and cry was raised throughout the country because of these voluntary contributions, and in the last years of the Republican administration they sank to almost nothing. The law was regarded and respected. The present Administration stood pledged to resist and destroy this evil equally with its pledges which I have adverted to in other directions.

I am consuming more time, Mr. President, than I ever intended in the present discussion of this subject, and my only comment upon the attitude of the Administration on this phase of the subject which I am discussing shall be to read the following:

[Washington Post, November 1, 1887.]

AMONG THE DEMOCRATS—MONEY FOR THE NEW YORK CAMPAIGN.

A representative of the New York State Democratic committee opened headquarters for the receipt of contributions for the New York campaign in the rooms of the Columbia Democratic Club, at No. 419 Tenth street, yesterday. A large number of contributions were received, the first of which came from a young lady in the Government Printing Office signing herself "Sincerely a Democrat." The office will be opened to-day at 4 o'clock, and remain open during the evening.

The following communication, which I read, appeared in the Washington Republican of November 8, 1887. I have never seen any denial of the facts as therein given:

CIVIL-SERVICE REFORM.

EDITOR NATIONAL REPUBLICAN: The following is a true copy of a receipt for money solicited from the employés of the Government Printing Office, with the understanding that the names of the parties contributing would be furnished the head of the office for favorable consideration:

NEW YORK, 10, 31, 1887.

Received from —— —— fifty cents contribution to the New York Democratic State Committee.

$0.50. EDWARD MURPHY, Jr., Chairman.
G. P. O. Per C. V. H.

The Government Printing Office was thoroughly canvassed. The cashier of the office went to every person entitled to vote in New York, and made it apparent to them that they must go home and vote, and on their return furnish the name of the precinct in which they voted.

Never in the history of the office has there been such a complete system of obtaining money from both men and women for political purposes, and that in a manner that left no doubt in the minds of the employés that if the request was not complied with their places would be filled by others.

The argument used to obtain money was about as follows: "If Grover Cleveland, President of the United States, could contribute $7,000, certainly a poor woman could pay 50 cents."

WASHINGTON, November 7.

From all this, Mr. President, something now ought to be plainly and clearly seen by every man who is not stone-blind. The political value to the Democratic party of the cry of "Civil-service reform" has, in the minds of the leaders of that party, ceased to be worth estimating. In all matters pertaining to the organization and management of the party and its conduct in political campaigns no further attention will be paid to this. The primaries, the caucuses, the conventions, and the conduct of elections will all go on in the old-fashioned Democratic way. The penetrating and controlling influence of the Administration upon the management of the party, both in Congress and in the broad battle-field before the American people, will be as marked, as dominant, as ever before. Wielding this influence, marking the paths of the party, shaping its course, breaking down opposition, enforcing discipline, deriding and defying protest will be found the immense mass of Federal office-holders throughout the entire land, as obedient to the orders of the Administration as the janizaries who do the bidding of an eastern despot. Some faint further note may possibly from time to time be heard in the form of a homily issued from the White House, descanting upon the merits of a civil-service reform, which the leaders of the Democratic party have never believed in, which faint note will be drowned in the partisan roar that is heard all along the line of that party.

This year, Mr. President, the land will rock in the furious conflict through which will be settled all the issues involved in the next Presidential election. I stand here now to declare my belief and to predict that, in the desperate effort which the Democratic party will make to retain possession of the Government, no means or appliances that have ever been used in the long years past by that party will be left unresorted to.

Intimidation, outrage, and murder will, if needed, again open a bloody grave, in which will be entombed anew the free ballot at the South. The vast army of office-holders will be marshaled in the conflict, and will be seen, and heard, and felt everywhere. Nor will it stop here. Every piece of work performed by contract under the Government will be levied upon for political contribution, and every man who performs labor, under these contracts, will be sternly called upon to add his ballot to the labor he performs as an offset to the wages he receives. No public building will be raised in the country whose work-shop will not be found the recruiting ground for the Democratic party. No war-ship will be built from whose yard will not issue, upon election day, its stream of Democratic voters.

I have, Mr. President, already seen this illustrated in my own State. In the post-office building which is now being built at Augusta, the capital of Maine, when the foundations had been laid in readiness for the structure to be imposed, as in all other like cases for years past, proposals were made for the furnishing of material and the erection of the building upon due schedule and invitation from the Department having charge of the work. Bids were made by several well-known and responsible contractors, and when it was discovered that the lowest bid was from a firm engaged in the granite business, at whose head was a prominent Republican, the Democrats of Augusta petitioned the Department to reject all bids and to allow the work to be done by the Government, which, through its agent, should employ and pay the men; and, for the first time in the whole course of the business of erecting public buildings for the General Government, this was assented to and this course adopted by the Department.

It is not a great matter, sir; but I venture to say that the laboring-man of Augusta who will not vote the Democratic ticket next year will have as little chance for employment upon the public building there as he would if he were an inmate of the State's prison.

The Secretary of the Navy is about laying the keel of two great war-ships to be built in two of the navy-yards under his management. Whether he takes personal part in it or not, it will be seen to that every man who is given employment in the building of those ships contributes not only his labor but his vote for retaining in power the present Administration.

There is no device, no plan of campaign, resorted to by the Democratic party in the days of Polk, and Pierce, and Buchanan, to retain control of the National Government, that will not be resorted to this year.

I turn back to a volume lying before me and read the testimony that was taken as to the practices of Democracy in the last years of the administration of President Buchanan. In raising funds for the party, with which to fight its political battles, no possible place of resource was left unvisited or untaxed. The clerks in Departments, the tide-waiters by the sea, the light-keepers along the coast, the postmasters, were all inexorably doomed. The navy-yards were a unit for the party. The contractors were assessed and reassessed and assessed again.

The exposure of the corruptions attending the naval contracts of Live Oak Swift helped, no little, to swell the avalanche of public sentiment that at last swept the Democratic party out of power.

Mr. President, no matter what has been written and proclaimed by the head of the present Administration, no matter what may be hereafter written and proclaimed from that source, these things which have been are the things which will be, and in the management and practices of the Democratic party there will be found no new thing under the sun.

In the mean time, Mr. President, it is a fair question to ask, Where will the Independents be?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to have read, in connection with what has fallen from the honorable Senator from Maine, a letter contained in the report of a committee which I hold in my hand. I send it to the desk to be read in connection with the remarks just made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be read, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[The circular is addressed "Mr. W. A. Richardson, P. O., Providence, R. I." and accompanied by an envelope addressed "Sidney F. Austin, esq., treasurer Republican Cong. Committee, German-American National Bank, Washington, D. C.," and is as follows:]

HEADQUARTERS

REPUBLICAN CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE,
[1878]

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 27th, 1878.

SIR: This committee, charged with laboring for the success of the Republican cause in the coming campaign for the election of members of Congress, call with confidence upon you, as a Republican, for such a contribution in money as you may feel willing to make, hoping that it may not be less than $10. The committee deem it proper, in thus appealing to Republicans generally, to inform those who happen to be in Federal employ that there will be no objection in any official quarter to such voluntary contribution.

The importance of the pending struggle can not easily be exaggerated. That the Senate is to be Democratic after the 4th of March, 1879, is very nearly a certainty. In view of this, the election of a Democratic House of Representatives would precipitate upon the country dangerous agitations, which would inevitably add to present distresses. Foremost among their schemes the opposition already announce their intention to attempt the revolutionary expulsion of the President from his office.

If, by the presentation of three candidates for the Presidency in 1880, the people should fail to choose, the House must elect—each State delegation casting one vote.

From what is now known, and with the growing dissensions in the camp of the enemy, the committee have good reason to enter upon their work with courage.

Please make prompt and favorable response to this letter, and remit at once, by draft or postal money-order, to "Sidney F. Austin, esq., treasurer, etc., German-American National Bank, Washington, D. C."

By order of the committee:

GEO. C. GORHAM, Secretary.

Mr. HALE. I only wish to say as to that letter that I agreed to it with great readiness, and I am ready to indorse it at any time; but it was almost ten years ago; and it was a letter which directly and explicitly excluded any idea of extorting contributions. Everything that came into that campaign fund ten years ago, before the agitation on the subject of civil-service reform, came in voluntarily. The contributions were not great; and they were only expended for the legitimate purposes of the campaign, and nobody then was pretending to be representing a great civil-service-reform party, as some are now doing.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not like to take the time of the Senator from Texas, who is entitled to the floor, by asking to have read, in connection with that letter, a letter from the President of the United States to the Secretary of the Treasury on the subject of civil-service reform. I should also like to make some extracts from the testimony contained in the report embodying that letter; but I will not take the time of the Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas is entitled to the floor on the unfinished business.

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, I oppose this bill because it is palpably and grossly violative of the Constitution, and because as a measure of policy it is unwise and inexpedient. The common schools of the States of this Union I hold to be solely and exclusively under the jurisdiction and control of the several States, and outside of and foreign to the jurisdiction of the National Government. The proposition of this bill is, as its title and provisions import, "to aid in the establishment and support of common schools" in the States and Territories, and for this purpose it appropriates $77,000,000, to be raised by Federal taxation, and expended over a period of eight years, under the control and subject to the supervision and direction of Federal officials. If this bill becomes a law it will be an insidious, but none the less certain seizure of the subject of education in the States to be controlled, regulated, and administered under Federal jurisdiction, whenever it may be the pleasure of the National Government to take charge of it. A brief reference to the provisions of the bill will establish this clearly. I read sections 4 and 6:

SEC. 4. That no State or Territory shall receive any money under this act until the governor thereof shall file with the Secretary of the Interior a statement, certified by him, showing the common-school system in force in such State or Territory; the amount of money expended therein during the last preceding school year in the support of common schools, not including expenditures for the rent, repair, or erection of school-houses; whether any discrimination is made in the raising or distributing of the common-school revenues or in the common-school facilities afforded between the white and colored children therein, and, so far as is practicable, the sources from which such revenues were derived; the manner in which the same were apportioned to the use of the common schools; the number of white and colored children in each county or parish and city between the ages of ten and twenty-one years, both inclusive, as given by the census of 1880, and the number of children, white and colored, of such school age attending school; the number of schools in operation in each county or parish and city, white and colored; the school term for each class; the number of teachers employed, white and colored, male and female, and the average compensation paid such teachers; the average attendance in each class, and the length of the school term. No money shall be paid out under this act to any State or Territory that shall not have provided by law a system of free common schools for all of its children of school age, without distinction of race or color, either in the raising or distributing of school revenues or in the school facilities afforded: Provided, That separate schools for white and colored children shall not be considered a violation of this condition. The Secretary of the Interior shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the States and Territories which he finds to be entitled to share in the benefits of this act and also the amount due to each.

SEC. 6. That the instruction in the common schools wherein these moneys shall be expended shall include the art of reading, writing, and speaking the English language, arithmetic, geography, history of the United States, and such other branches of useful knowledge as may be taught under local laws; and copies of all school-books authorized by the school boards, or other authorities of the respective States and Territories, and used in the schools of the same, shall be filed with the Secretary of the Interior.

Section 10 forbids the erection of school-houses or the payment of rent out of this fund. Sections 4 and 12 define various grounds on which the Secretary of the Interior may declare forfeitures of the rights of the several States in the fund.

Section 16 appropriates an additional sum of $2,000,000 for the construction of school-houses, to be built in accordance with plans to be furnished on application to the Bureau of Education at Washington, provided that not more than $150 shall be paid toward the cost of any one house; expenditures of moneys under this bill by the States to be fully reported by them to the Secretary of the Interior annually.

Section 1 provides that in order to receive the benefits of this act, each State shall by bill or resolution of its Legislature accept the provisions of the same, and if any State shall fail to accept by such bill or resolution, that the share of such State shall be divided among those accepting. It is obvious that the purpose of the bill is not alone to provide aid for the common schools, but to follow the money and see to its application, and prescribe the methods, instrumentalities, etc., through which it shall be expended. It prescribes certain branches of study to be pursued in the schools. It asserts the right to supervise the selection of the text-books to be used, for what other conclusion can be drawn from the requirement of section 6, that "copies of all school-books" authorized to be used in the common schools of the respective States shall be filed with the Secretary of the Interior?

It requires a full and detailed report from each State annually of the administration and operation of the common schools, and of the mode and manner of expenditure not only of the money to be furnished under this bill but of all furnished by the State, and a failure to make this report subjects the State to the penalty of forfeiture of its share in the fund. The Secretary of the Interior is invested with autocratic power in the administration of this fund, and may bring any State in the Union to his feet in order to avert the judgment of forfeiture he is authorized for many causes to pronounce. That official is also authorized to hear and determine charges against the several States, which under the provisions of this bill may be arraigned before him by any single individual or collection of individuals who may choose to prefer a charge. The bill does not define what shall be the amount or quality of interest or title the United States Government shall own in the school-houses the two million building fund shall assist in constructing, but can it be doubted that to the extent this fund defrays the cost of the school-houses the Government will claim a corresponding interest and title?

These provisions and others to be found in the bill show conclusively the intention and animus and legal effect of the bill, if it passes, to be not to stop with handing over the money to the States and Territories, to be administered by them in their own way in accordance with the requirements of their respective school systems, but to assume jurisdiction over the common schools of all the States, take hold of them, participate in their administration, and place them under the supervision and greatly under the control of the Secretary of the Interior. The desires and intentions of leading Republican Senators and their estimate of the meaning and signification of this bill have never been concealed. The construction I have given the bill is fully in line with the views they have expressed on the subject. Who voices the sentiment of the Republican party more thoroughly or with greater fidelity than the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], and who has a better right to speak for it than he? I read from a speech made by that Senator in a former debate on this same bill:

If the United States have the right to appropriate the money, they have the right to say upon what conditions the money shall be expended. If they say we will aid the South, or the Southern States, to educate their illiterate children, then the United States have the power and right to set out the principles and conditions or limitations of that grant. The greater includes the less; and if the power is given to make these appropriations at all, the power is also given to say for whose benefit the money shall be expended, how it shall be expended, where and when, and how apportioned, and for what purposes. This is as clear a proposition as can be shown in Euclid or any other mathematical work.

The power to appropriate money in aid of common schools in the States carries with it the power, says the Senator from Ohio, to follow the money, see to its application, and prescribe the methods and instrumentalities of its expenditure and disbursement. What does all this mean but that the National Government, if it has the power to appropriate the money, has also the power to control and regulate and administer the schools so far as the expenditure of this money is concerned? That the Senator's proposition is correct can not for one moment be doubted.

On the same line I read from a speech of Mr. Bayard made in the same debate:

In a public newspaper of large influence, ably and intelligently conducted, of which one of the proprietors, and perhaps one of the editors, is one of our most honored associates in this body, I mean the senior Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. Anthony) I find a careful editorial on the subject of this bill, which I commend to the consideration of the Senate. After discussing the Blair bill, as it is called, after the distinguished Senator who presents it for the consideration of the Senate, the writer says:

"The more honest, as the more truthful way of putting it, would, perhaps, be to say that the necessity has arisen from the exercise of ultra-constitutional, but necessary authority, and that it is a logical consequence of the emancipation and enfranchisement of the negro, these being the inevitable results of the war of the rebellion. It is not at all irrelevant, however, to inquire whether the means will secure the end. The committee finds that five-twelfths of the school population of the country are growing up in ignorance of the English alphabet; that in eighty-six cities, containing a school population of over 2,000,000, over one-third of the children never enter a school room. New York City has 114,000 children not enrolled at all, and of a school population of 385,000 there is an average attendance of only 132,000. Some of our New England villages exhibit statistics which are simply appalling. The South excuses herself on account of emancipation and poverty; the North explains herself by the inundation of a foreign population. Whatever the causes, and they are clear enough, the facts are to be admitted and faced. The prevailing sentiment is that the State shall no longer be responsible for the education of her children, but they shall be educated by the National Government, the State doing so much as Congress shall require. This is to be understood, however: when the Federal Government undertakes this business, as of right and duty it has assumed, and the States have conceded that it has full and sovereign authority, it will be bound to look out for the 'general welfare' in this behalf, according to its best judgment and highest wisdom. The schools must conform to its idea of virtue and its standard of education."

Mr. President, I concur in the result stated by this writer. * * * But I believe that the logical results of this bill, should it become a law, are fairly stated, and that if those who consider that it is wise and right, that it is justifiable in them as members of the Government, and subject to the oath to support the Constitution, if they shall consider it wise and right to accept this appropriation in the form and manner in which it has been tendered, let them consider fairly that it is done in disregard of that mode of preserving liberty and promoting the general welfare, which was ordained by the founders of this Government, in the charter which they have left for our guidance.

This extract from Senator Anthony's paper, expressive of the views he entertained, and indorsed by Mr. Bayard in his speech against this bill, as a correct and logical exposition of the effect and results of its passage, shows so plainly that it can not be misunderstood the meaning and signification attached to the bill by Senator Anthony. It is unnecessary to consume time with other quotations to the same effect from speeches of Republican party leaders, for, with a possible occasional exception, it is well known that all of them entertain the views quoted from Senators SHERMAN and Anthony. The views of the Republican supporters of this bill, and the arguments they have made in advocacy of it, possess at least the merit of consistency, and from their standpoint are logical. They believe in a strong, paternal government. They doubt the capacity of the people of the States to manage their domestic concerns, and especially their common schools. They believe the people of the State are not willing to tax themselves at home sufficiently to maintain a good system of common schools, and that Congress, knowing so much better what is needed in the States than the people and State Legislatures do, should take the matter in hand and regulate it. They see no constitutional objection to this course, and besides being favorable to a high protective tariff, which necessarily piles up a vast surplus beyond the needs of the Government in the Treasury, they find in measures of this character the means of expending it and perpetuating a high tariff. Hence it is that we have before us a bill embodying the Republican idea of unlimited power in the National Government in the levy and collection of taxes, and equally unlimited power of appropriation; a bill which utterly ignores the difference between matters of State and of national jurisdiction, and boldly seizes and proposes to control and administer a great subject heretofore universally conceded to be within the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the States. It is true the bill provides that no State shall receive its benefits, unless by legislative bill or resolution they are accepted with the attending conditions, the share of non-consenting States in the appropriation to be divided among those which shall accept.

Taxation under the Constitution must be uniform. The people of all the States must be taxed alike, and bear the burden of raising the money alike, whether the States of which they are citizens consent to accept the benefits of this bill or not. So it is apparent that the States are not free agents, and have not a free choice in determining whether or not they will accept the provisions of the bill. If any State shall decline to consent to an invasion of her jurisdiction in the mode proposed by this bill, a penalty amounting to the full sum paid by her people in raising the seventy-seven millions appropriated by the bill is laid upon her for the contumacy. The provisions of the bill are coercive upon the States. They must accept or be punished for refusal by a heavy fine in the shape of taxation from which they are to derive no benefit. The freedom of choice, the unconstrained exercise of volition and discretion necessary to valid consent, are utterly wanting. But if every State in the Union should consent freely, voluntarily, and without compulsion to the terms of the bill, if the common schools of the State are exclusively within State jurisdiction, and outside that of the National Government, as I hold them to be, and as the Democratic supporters of this bill admit, this consent could not and would not rightfully confer jurisdiction over them on the National Government.

The powers of Congress can not be enlarged by the consent of the States, nor can those of the States be diminished by the action of Congress. An amendment to the Constitution alone can make these changes. The States can not consent to a usurpation of their powers by Congress any more than Congress can rightfully go into the reserved domain of the States. The powers granted to Congress and those reserved to the States are absolutely fixed by the Constitution beyond the reach or control of either, except by amendment of the Constitution in the mode required in that instrument. What the Constitution has ordained shall be kept separate and apart and distinct can not be mixed and mingled, even by the joint action and consent of both Congress and the States. To hold otherwise would be to confess that the Constitution may be nullified by collusion between Congress and the States, or changed without amendment in the mode prescribed by the Constitution. A Congressional majority through methods of this character would be omnipotent and the Constitution become a dead letter.

I therefore hold, Mr. President, that the so-called option tendered to the States in this bill to accept or not its benefits, viewed from any standpoint whatever, fails to relieve it, if passed, of the character of a naked trespass upon the rights and a direct and open usurpation of the powers of the States in respect to their common schools. If the common schools are under the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the States, as they have universally heretofore been held to be, and are generally now admitted to be, I hold it to be an indisputable proposition that the National Government has no constitutional power to tax the people for their support. In other words, I maintain that the power does not exist in Congress to levy and collect taxes from the people for the purpose of raising money to be expended on objects outside of the national jurisdiction. Taxation and appropriation, to be legitimate and constitutional, must be for a public purpose, a purpose which it is the right and duty of the particular Government which collects and expends the money to effectuate.

Says Judge Cooley, in his great work on Constitutional Limitations:

> The purpose must in every instance pertain to the sovereignty with which the tax originates; it must be something within its jurisdiction so as to justify its making provision for it.

Again, in the same paragraph, and on the same subject, he says:

> State expenses are not to be provided for by Federal taxation, nor Federal expenses by State taxation, because in neither case would the taxation be levied by the Government upon whose public the burden of the expenses properly rests. To provide for such expenses would consequently not be a purpose in which the people taxed would be legally interested.

The same learned author declares that the object of all taxation is to raise revenue, and that "the burden would not be taxation if revenue were not the purpose." What is revenue? It is money raised by taxation for the support of the Government, to enable the Government to carry out and execute its proper constitutional functions, powers, and duties. If it is raised for any other purpose, or to be expended on objects not within the jurisdiction or the fair scope of the powers of the Government, the process of raising it, says Judge Cooley, is not taxation, but confiscation. These are elementary legal principles, over which there is no dispute or controversy. All lawyers and judges concur in their correctness. This bill tested by these principles is unconstitutional, from caption to conclusion. Is it proposed by this bill, which appropriates $79,000,000 to be raised by taxation, to execute any of the powers, or discharge any of the functions, or operate on any subject within the jurisdiction of this Government? It is not; on the contrary, the money is to be expended on the common schools, confessedly outside of the jurisdiction and powers of the National Government, and exclusively within those of the States.

If Congress can raise by taxation money to be expended on objects outside of the national jurisdiction, then the power of Congress to tax the people and appropriate money is as boundless as the world. There is no limit to it. If a due execution of the proper powers and an enforcement of the jurisdiction of the Government do not fix and prescribe the limits of the taxing power, nothing else does, and the power is without limit as long as a dollar is left in the pockets of the people. If Congress possesses this all-absorbing, unlimited, and universal taxing and appropriating power in order to provide for the "common defense and general welfare," as claimed by the advocates of this bill, why did the framers of the Constitution, in Article I, section 8 of that instrument, enumerate and define the specific purposes for which Congress should lay and collect taxes. It was utterly superfluous to do this under that construction of the "general-welfare" clause. Mr. Madison, in an extract from one of his speeches read by me in a former debate on this bill, in a few words exposed the absurdity of the construction contended for. He said:

> There are consequences still more extensive, which, as they follow clearly from the doctrine combated, must either be admitted or the doctrine must be given up. If Congress can employ money indefinitely to the general welfare, and are the sole and supreme judges of the general welfare, they may take the care of religion into their own hands; they may appoint teachers in every State, county, and parish, and pay them out of their public treasury; they may take into their own hands the education of children, establishing in like manner schools throughout the Union; they may assume the provision for the poor; they may undertake the regulation of all roads other than post-roads; in short, everything, from the highest object of State legislation down to the most minute objects of police, would be thrown under the power of Congress; for every object I have mentioned would admit of the application of money, and might be called, if Congress pleased, provisions for the general welfare.

The consequences portrayed by Mr. Madison, as resulting inevitably from the only construction of the "general-welfare" clause upon which this bill can be justified, he says, "must either be admitted or the doctrine must be given up," and he groups them in the declaration that such a construction would throw under the power of Congress every subject of State concern, from the highest object of State legislation down to the most minute objects of police. Unlimited power to tax, coupled with unlimited power of appropriation, is the theory of this bill, and it can not stand for one moment on any other. The proposition that Congress is the sole judge of what the general welfare requires, and the discretion of Congress the sole limit upon the power of Congress to tax the people and appropriate money for the promotion of the "general welfare," will place every dollar's worth of property in this country under the dominion of Congress without a single limitation upon the power of Congress to tax it not self-imposed.

Judge Miller as the organ of the court, delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the noted Topeka case reported in 20th Wallace, discussing the taxing power, said:

> It may well be doubted, if a man is to hold all he is accustomed to call his own, all in which he has placed his happiness, under the unlimited dominion of others, whether it is not wiser that this power should be exercised by one man than by many. The theory of our Government, State and National, is opposed to the unlimited deposit of power anywhere.

The same learned judge, in the opinion I have just read from, discussing and denying the unlimited power of taxation and appropriation, also said:

> It must be conceded that there are such rights in every free government beyond the control of the State. A government which recognized no such rights, which held the lives, the liberty, and the property of its citizens subject at all times to the absolute disposition and unlimited control of even the most democratic depository of power is, after all, but a despotism. It is true it is a despotism of the many, of the majority, if you choose to call it so, but it is none the less a despotism.

It does seem that language so strong and warning so impressive ought to be heeded. The acceptance of this bill, if it passes, by the Legislatures of all or a majority of the States will have all the moral effect of an amendment to the Constitution in that it will stamp upon that instrument the construction claimed for it by the friends of the bill, involving the consequences so graphically detailed by Mr. Madison, from whom I have just read, and which will strike down at one blow all the barriers erected by the fathers of the Republic for the protection of the States in the sole and exclusive right to manage and control in their own way their domestic concerns. No more far-reaching or revolutionary measure was ever before seriously considered in Congress.

I grant that the power to appropriate money already in the Treasury is necessarily unlimited, except by the moral obligation resting upon our lawmakers to be economical and to confine its expenditure to legitimate constitutional purposes, and concede that instances may be shown in which money in the Treasury has been appropriated by Congress for purposes not entirely in accord with this view, but affirm with entire confidence that in the rare cases where it has been done the debates show it to have been done with extreme reluctance, under extraordinary pressure, and frequently under circumstances where feeling and sentiment were admitted by the actors to have dominated judgment and reason; and the amounts appropriated in such instances have always been so small as to be comparatively insignificant. It is also worthy of special emphasis here that in none of these cases, all of which have been industriously hunted up and paraded as precedents in former debates on this bill and are familiar to the Senate, has an appropriation been made and applied in a way to trench upon or invade the prerogatives of a State or State jurisdiction over domestic concerns, as is done in this bill. Not one of them in the remotest degree touched the rights or the acknowledged jurisdiction of the States.

The history of Federal legislation shows no instance where a system of taxation and appropriations has been deliberately formulated, involving the raising and expenditure of money on objects confessedly outside of and beyond the national jurisdiction. This bill is absolutely without precedent, as it is without constitutional sanction for its support.

The friends of this bill, in order to escape the force of the argument against the power of Congress to tax the people to raise money to be expended outside of the national jurisdiction or to be given away in the form of donations, have laid great stress on the fact that the National Government since its foundation has been making donations of public lands to States for educational purposes, and these grants or gifts have been cited and held up as precedents for what they call the donations made to the States in this bill. They say, if the Government can give land, which is worth money, it can give the money. The answer to this is obvious and conclusive. Section 3 of Article IV of the Constitution reads thus:

> The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States, and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States, or of any particular State.

This clause has been the subject of repeated discussion and construction in the Supreme Court of the United States, in acts of Congress, and speeches of leading statesmen, and by the various commentators on the Constitution of the United States, and there is an absolute concurrence of opinion among all of them, unbroken by a single dissent, so far as I have been able to find, that it invests Congress with an absolute, plenary, and uncontrolled ownership and power of disposal over the public lands. The term "other property" occurring in the same clause has in the same way been held to refer to the ships, arms, and munitions of war, which at the time of the adoption of the Constitution belonged to the State sovereignties.

I read from Kent's Commentaries on this subject. He says:

> Congress have the exclusive right of pre-emption to all Indian lands lying in the Territories of the United States. This was so decided in the case of Johnson vs. McIntosh. Upon the doctrine of the court in that case, and in that of Fletcher vs. Peck, the United States own the soil as well as the jurisdiction of the immense tracts of unpatented lands included within their Territories, and of all the productive funds which those lands may hereafter create. The title is in the United States by the treaty of peace with Great Britain, and by subsequent cessions from France and Spain, and by cessions from the individual States, and the Indians have only the right of occupancy, and the United States possess the legal title subject to that occupancy, and with an absolute and exclusive right to extinguish the Indian title of occupancy by either conquest or purchase.

Again, says the same author:

> The Constitution gave to Congress the power to dispose of and to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States, and to admit new States into the Union. Since the Constitution was formed the value and efficacy of this power have been magnified to an incalculable extent by the purchase of Louisiana and Florida, and under the doctrine contained in the cases I have referred to Congress have a large and magnificent portion of territory under their absolute control and disposal.

I now read from Judge Story's Commentaries on the same subject:

> The power of Congress over the public territory is clearly exclusive and universal, and their legislation is subject to no control, but is absolute and unlimited, unless so far as it is affected by stipulations in the cessions or by the ordinance of 1787, under which any part of it has been settled.

Again, says Judge Story:

> In the view of this doctrine, what is to be thought of the recent purchases of Louisiana and Florida? If there was danger before, how mightily must it be increased by the accession of such a vast extent of territory and such a vast increase of resources? Hitherto the experience of the country has justified no alarms on this subject from such a source. On the other hand, the public lands hold out, after the discharge of the national debt, ample revenues to be devoted to the cause of education and to sound learning, and to internal improvements, without trenching upon the property or embarrassing the pursuits of the people by burdensome taxation. The constitutional objection to the appropriation of the other revenues of the Government to such objects has not been supposed to apply to an appropriation of the proceeds of the public lands.

I call especial attention to the last sentence in this extract from Story's Commentaries, where he says: "The constitutional objection to the appropriation of the other revenues of the Government to such objects has not been supposed to apply to an appropriation of the proceeds of the public lands." Congress having absolute power of disposal over the public lands, conferred by express grant of the Constitution, has made donations of them to colleges and schools, to railroad corporations, to actual settlers, to immigrant foreigners, to soldiers and sailors as bounty, has promoted timber culture by donations of them, has sold them for money, has created reservations for Indians on them, and, indeed, has disposed of them in every way that lands can be disposed of, and nobody questions the power of Congress thus to dispose of them.

In accepting donations of land for educational purposes the States have simply taken what Congress had a constitutional right to give. No implication of a right in the National Government to take charge of the schools of the States can arise from such donations, whereas Congress having no power to tax the people except to raise revenue for the support of the Government, and to execute the powers and enforce the jurisdiction of the Government, can not appropriate the revenues thus raised by taxation to the support of common schools in the States, except upon the assumption that the common schools are within the jurisdiction of the National Government, whose duty it is to provide for them. Those who support this bill are estopped from denying the jurisdiction of the National Government over the common schools, because without such jurisdiction there is no power in Congress to raise money by taxation and appropriate it for their support, as is done in this bill.

No such conclusion or consequence arises from a donation of land, because there is no such jurisdictional limitation on the power to appropriate or dispose of land which belongs to the Government as exists on the power to appropriate money taken out of the pockets of the people by taxation. I am now and have always been willing to vote for donations of public lands, or the proceeds of sale of the public lands, to the States for educational purposes; not on the terms and conditions prescribed in this bill, because they assert for the National Government a power and control over the common schools, their administration and current management, utterly inconsistent with the exclusive jurisdiction possessed by the States under the Constitution over them, but as pure and simple donations to be used by the States in their own way in carrying on in the mode which to them may seem best the school systems established and maintained by themselves.

Wherever the power of the National Government can rightfully be exerted it is supreme and paramount. This power can be exerted nowhere and on no subject unless the field of its exercise is within the legitimate jurisdiction of the National Government. The power of the States is subordinate and must yield to this superior power whenever and wherever it is met. The partial support and control of the common schools of the States by the National Government provided for in this bill carries with it a clear, absolute confession by those who support it that the subject is within the National jurisdiction, and, being so, that the National Government in its discretion may, if it chooses, occupy the entire field, take full charge and control of and wholly maintain and support and administer the common schools of the States.

If the duty rests upon the National Government to take hold of this subject, "and save the life of the nation" by "extirpating illiteracy," as the friends of this bill claim, they must remember that if there be such duty, there must be a corresponding power, for without the power there could be no obligation of duty, and the power existing, and being necessarily paramount and supreme, that the State jurisdiction must retire before it and yield the entire educational field to the national authority whenever it is claimed. The passage of this bill will bring this conclusion as inevitably as logic can do it, and its acceptance by the States will be the longest stride toward a centralized, consolidated, paternal Government ever taken since the Constitution was adopted. It is to be hoped that the good sense and patriotism of the people of this country will reject the glittering bribe it offers and avert the calamity of its passage.

I oppose this bill, Mr. President, not only because of its unconstitutional interference with a subject belonging to the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the States, and will establish a construction of the Constitution which, in the language of Mr. Madison, will throw under the power of Congress every subject of State concern "from the highest object of State legislation down to the most minute objects of police," to the utter overthrow of the theory of a dual government, an indissoluble union of indestructible States, with the jurisdiction, powers, and duties of each clearly defined and closely guarded, on which our Constitution is built, but because as a measure of policy it is unwise and inexpedient, hurtful to the cause of education, and full of mischief as a factor in the politics of the country, into which it will plunge the common-school systems of the States.

The argument in support of the expediency of this bill is predicated mainly upon the census returns of 1880, which show 5,715,395 illiterates over ten years of age in the sixteen old slave States.

These figures are harped upon unceasingly by the friends of this bill, but they do not allude to the fact that of this number 2,961,371 are adult whites and blacks over twenty-one years of age, who of course, being beyond the school age, should not be estimated in making provision for the "extirpation of illiteracy." The number who might possibly be benefited are the illiterates between ten and twenty-one years of age, who numbered, according to this report, 1,754,024. When from this number is deducted, as should be done, say one-fifth, to represent those who, between the ages of seventeen and twenty-one, would never have attended a school, we have in 1880, when this report was made, 1,371,220 curable illiterates. This analysis gives some little idea of the extent of the exaggeration which has been indulged in by the advocates of this bill.

Since 1880 the most marked and remarkable feature in the almost phenomenal development and progress of the South has been the growth and improvement of the common schools of that section. These have outstripped all the other evidences of advancement, and are to-day under the influence of a public sentiment more keenly alive than ever before to their importance, having a more rapid growth in excellence and extent than at any former time. So far as illiteracy in the South is curable it is safe to say that it is rapidly decreasing under the beneficent influence of a constantly improving system of common schools, and that in a few years it will substantially disappear, if these schools are not interfered with.

I have before me a pamphlet issued from the office of the New York Evening Post, containing a number of able editorials which have appeared in the Post, from one of which I read. Says the writer:

Less than 5 per cent. of all the inhabitants above the age of ten years in Maine, New Hampshire, or Vermont in either 1870 or 1880 were unable to read, and yet the official records show that the average length of the school year between 1860 and 1870 was only 119 days in Vermont, 99 in Maine, and 97 in New Hampshire, while in eight of the sixteen old slave States schools are now open 100 or more days, and in only three States less than 75 days.

If schools like these kept down illiteracy to 5 per cent. in those States, may we not reasonably hope with our schools to reach the same results, especially in view of the following statement, which I read from the same pamphlet:

For example, South Carolina and Tennessee increased the amount devoted to this purpose (common schools) between 1880 and 1884 by nearly 33 per cent.; Georgia, Alabama, Missouri, Virginia, and West Virginia almost 40 per cent., and Arkansas and Texas considerably more than 100 per cent.

The States of the South being agricultural and sparsely settled, can not, of course, show such results in their schools as densely populated and wealthy States, such as Massachusetts and some others, can show; but although their common schools were commenced only about twenty years ago, they will bear favorable comparison with the schools of Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont, which, like them, are also agricultural States, whose school systems, however, have been in existence for three-quarters of a century.

Our schools are growing, extending, and improving, not stationary as in many of the other States. The great mass of illiteracy in the South is among the adult negroes who can not be reached, but the generation growing up, white and black, are being educated in some States perhaps better than in others, but are being educated under a constantly improving system of schools in all the States. This is being done in the good old way—by local taxation self-imposed by the people. A system of schools thus planted and nourished into vigorous growth sends its roots deep into the soil, and becomes self-supporting through the creation of a sustaining public sentiment which enjoys and appreciates its beneficent results.

Already the pamphlet before me, from which I have just read, shows that more than two-thirds of all children of school age attend school in Delaware, West Virginia, Missouri, Florida, and Texas; almost two-thirds in South Carolina, Mississippi, and Tennessee, and more than half in Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, and Arkansas. Such results in twenty years, considering the impoverished condition of the South when its school systems were begun, fully justify the tribute of Dr. Mayo, the philanthropist and educator, that "no people in human history have made an effort so remarkable, all circumstances considered, as the people of the South have done during the past fifteen years, and in what they have already done for the schooling of their children," and that of General Armstrong, principal of the Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute, in one of his late reports, that "the educational progressive movement at the South is, I believe, the most marvelous and the grandest fact or feature in this century of American life."

The people who, under the most adverse circumstances, have accomplished such results and earned such encomiums from such sources may certainly be trusted to perfect their schools and extend their benefits as rapidly as is consistent with healthy growth.

Still later statistics, which I read from a copy of the Nation now before me, are even more satisfactory:

The latest reports of the superintendents of education in the Southern States teem with proofs that outside help is not needed, a few of which must be cited. The average length of the school year in Virginia is already nearly six months, and the superintendent recommends as perfectly practicable a further extension through the increase of local assessments. In West Virginia the average length is nearly five months, and the superintendent urges an increase, remarking that "the additional tax for two months would scarcely be felt." In Tennessee the superintendent reported that "our public-school system is growing in favor with the people," and the Legislature justified his statement by more than doubling the school tax within a month after the Blair bill lapsed by the expiration of the Forty-ninth Congress, while the counties in their turn are doubling the local fund raised for education. In Alabama the superintendent recites the growth of the system within four years from 4,624 schools, with 177,428 pupils and a school fund of $392,904, to 5,595 schools, with 252,967 pupils and a school fund of $523,353; he says that "our educational facilities must be increased to keep abreast with the material prosperity of the State," and adds that "all know there has been a gratifying increase in the resources of the State during the past few years, which requires an increase in the annual appropriation for schools." In Arkansas the superintendent reports that "we are making rapid progress in our educational interests, and in a few more years Arkansas will stand side by side with the most favored of her sister States in the educational advantages she offers to her children"—a statement which is certainly warranted by the increase between 1883 and 1886 from 2,462 teachers, 112,233 pupils, and $479,471 expenditure, to 3,691 teachers, 175,935 pupils, and $866,892 expenditure. In Georgia the superintendent reported an increase within four years of pupils from 244,197 to 309,594, and of expenditure from $498,533 to $723,161, while he showed once more that a small increase in the tax, which could be laid "without unduly burdening the people," would enable the State to keep the schools in operation for six months of the year. In Florida the superintendent reports that the amount expended upon schools has risen within four years from $133,260 to $400,000, while the school year falls only a few days short of New Hampshire and Maine. In Texas the superintendent reports a steady and rapid advance in the cause of popular education, and insists that "the school term throughout the State should not be less than seven months."

A good common-school system is the growth of time. One can not be sprung into existence perfect with any amount of money. Trained teachers are the great educational need in the South. The normal schools are slowly supplying this necessity. Without trained teachers good schools are impossible. The money resources of the South are ample for the supply of good teachers, and as this supply increases the fund for the support of the schools will increase. The two will grow together.

Mr. President, this method of building up and maintaining our public schools is in line with the traditions of our people, the theory of our Government, and promises the grandest results in the future. It nurtures a feeling of self-reliance, of individuality, and of self-respect. Ultimate success in the near future is assured by our achievements in the past, and when it is reached through the unaided efforts of the people of the States, the people will be stronger, the States will be more powerful, and the Union more invincible and enduring.

Mr. President, if this bill becomes law it will be the beginning of the end of State jurisdiction over common schools. The theory of this bill, that at the end of eight years aid will no longer be needed, is all wrong. From the first year that it goes into effect, if it ever does, relaxation of effort on the part of the people and the State governments will ensue, and will grow to the end, until it will be found, at the end of eight years, that aid will be more necessary than it has ever yet been supposed to be. When it is found that the United States Government will, if the States will not, maintain the schools, the Government of the United States will have it to do, and will take charge of them and administer and maintain them. Then will be seen the consummate folly of having, by means of this measure, arrested and crushed out the magnificently energetic spirit and enthusiasm of the people in the cause of popular education—a spirit which to-day elicits the applause and commands the admiration of the world.

Why the necessity for doing this thing? Is it more economical for the National Government to administer the common schools? The appropriation in this bill is called a donation, a gift, but the money is to be taxed out of the people; the very people to whom the so-called donation is to be made are to pay it first to the tax-gatherer, who is to pay it into the Treasury, whence, less the heavy cost of collection, it is to be returned. Would it not be more economical for the people, at a much less cost, to tax themselves at home, retain their money at home, and manage their schools through home instrumentalities?

This appropriation is no donation. The promise of the bill, if it is submissively accepted by the States, is to return the money taxed out of the people, if not forfeited in one of the various modes provided for that purpose, with a large per cent. off, but in the operation the States are to lose and the National Government gain power and jurisdiction over the common schools.

A gentleman in South Carolina, whose name I regret not to have, condenses the argument against the expediency of the bill in a nutshell. He says:

You know my deep interest in the public-school system. Hence I am opposed to national aid. You can not plaster the South with this system. It is a growth, and its certain and healthy growth can only be secured by each community providing for its own schools. The Blair bill is simply, in another form, the old hallucination, "forty acres and a mule," which has caused more briers and sassafras bushes to grow in Southern fields than all else.

The high tariff, the great surplus which flows from it, and a determination to perpetuate that tariff and invent some means of getting rid of its surplus product is the prolific parent of this and other measures of monstrous extravagance.

But, Mr. President, this is not all. With the passage of this bill our common schools will become matters of national interest and consideration, and legitimate subjects of party declaration and resolution in political platforms and debate in party canvasses. In other words, the common schools will become an element in party politics, and will always be the prolific source of supply to the demagogue of material for fomenting for political effect trouble between the races in the South. They will be an issue in every canvass, and will be the most potent means of inciting anew and keeping alive race issues now being so happily solved under State jurisdiction.

Mr. President, having, in the long and exhaustive debates twice before had in the Senate over this bill, more than once on the floor of the Senate declared my opposition to it, and the reasons therefor at length, I have, nevertheless, in view of the overshadowing importance of the bill, and its far-reaching consequences, deemed it my duty again to protest against it.

Mr. GRAY obtained the floor.

Mr. BUTLER. As I understand that it will be more agreeable to the Senator from Delaware to proceed to-morrow, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 44 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 12, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 11, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of so much of the Journal as relates to the introduction and reference of bills and resolutions be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The residue of the Journal was then read and approved.

REIMBURSEMENT OF COLOROW AND OTHER INDIANS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of the Interior of an appropriation to reimburse Colorow and other Indians for losses sustained in 1887; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATES OF ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Attorney-General of an appropriation for the support, maintenance, and transportation of District of Columbia convicts, for criminal statistics, and for procuring information concerning penal institutions; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BUILDING FOR ENGRAVING AND PRINTING BUREAU.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing of an appropriation for the erection of a necessary outhouse for the use of that bureau; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WOMEN'S SILK-CULTURE ASSOCIATION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Commissioner of Agriculture, transmitting the annual report of the Women's Silk-Culture Association of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

ACCOUNTS OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a statement of the disbursing agent of the Interstate Commerce Commission of disbursements by and outstanding obligations against the commission; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

TILE FLOOR IN LABORATORY, BUREAU OF THE MINT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimate from the Director of the Mint of an appropriation for an encaustic floor in the laboratory, Bureau of the Mint; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DEFICIENCIES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates from the Secretary of State of deficiencies in appropriations for 1887 and prior years; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PRINTING FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE.

Mr. BELMONT, by unanimous consent, presented the following resolution; which was adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs be authorized to have printed and bound for its use such documents as it may deem necessary in connection with subjects referred to it during the present Congress.

Mr. BELMONT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RESTRICTION OF OWNERSHIP OF REAL ESTATE IN THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. BELMONT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 4756) to amend an act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens, etc., approved March 3, 1887; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. BELMONT. I move its reference to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. That would seem to go to the Committee on the District of Columbia. It covers alone the District of Columbia.

Mr. BELMONT. I ask, then, that it be referred to that committee.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was ordered to be printed.

REFUND OF DIRECT TAX.

Mr. FULLER (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 4757) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. FULLER (by request) also introduced a bill (H. R. 4758) to amend section 3847, Revised Statutes United States, 1878, Title XLVI, chapter 1; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER proceeded to call the select and standing committees for reports.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I did not hear the Committee on Military Affairs called.

The SPEAKER. It was called.

CAPTURED FLAGS, ETC.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back a resolution in regard to captured flags, and to move its reference to the House Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am also directed to report back a resolution in relation to war records, and to move its reference to the House Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules the House will now proceed to the consideration of public bills for an hour.

Mr. MILLS. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with it for this morning, and move to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for reference of the President's annual message.

Mr. REED. I understand a report has been made from the Committee on Military Affairs in reference to a privileged matter which should not have been submitted during this hour. My colleague [Mr. BOUTELLE] is absent on account of sickness, and I ask the gentleman from Illinois to withdraw his report for the present.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I did not understand it was a privileged matter.

The SPEAKER. It is, except during the hour when committees are called for reports. It must go to the Calendar if reported during that hour. Outside of that hour it is privileged.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I withdraw both reports.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and they will be withdrawn.

REFERENCE OF PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for reference of the President's message.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. MCCREARY in the chair.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, it has been the usual practice to distribute the President's message to the different committees of the House in accordance with the subjects treated in the message. In the message to the present Congress there is but one subject, and that pertains to the business of the Committee on Ways and Means. For that reason the resolution has been presented in its present shape, and I ask its adoption.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCCREARY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the President's message, had directed him to report back a resolution providing for its reference to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the annual message of the President of the United States to the two Houses of Congress be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. MILLS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that there is no Calendar except the Private Calendar printed so far, and the Chair is unable therefore to lay before the House the business under the rule in its regular order. There were in fact no reports from committees until yesterday afternoon.

Mr. REED. Let us take up the private bills, then.

Mr. BURROWS. If there is no business before the House I move that we adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised that the Committee on Appropriations is in consultation, and possibly may desire the House to go into Committee of the Whole to take up the deficiency bill. The Chair will be informed in a few moments.

Mr. BURROWS. I withdraw the motion.

PRINTING FOR COMMITTEES.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Territories be authorized to have printed and bound such papers and documents for the use of said committee as may be necessary, in connection with the subjects considered by the committee during the present Congress.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is offered in pursuance of the unanimous request of the committee to-day.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois to allow that to be amended to apply also to the Committee on the Public Lands. It is indispensable that printing should be done for that committee also.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no objection to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The first question is, will the House consider the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois at this time?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I then offer the amendment I have suggested.

Mr. REED. What is it?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves to amend by adding also the Committee on the Public Lands to the resolution.

Mr. REED. Why not add all the committees at once?

The amendment of Mr. HOLMAN was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I offer to amend by adding the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. REED. That is right. Put them all in, and then let us reject the whole lot.

The amendment of Mr. HATCH was agreed to.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to amend by inserting "the Post-Office and Post-Roads."

Mr. SPRINGER. I accept that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is this proposition?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. It is a proposition to reduce the revenues.

The amendment of Mr. BLOUNT was agreed to.

Mr. CULBERSON. I move to insert the Judiciary Committee.

There being no objection, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move the previous question now on the resolution and amendments.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that the Committee on Indian Affairs be inserted first.

Mr. SPRINGER. Very well; I will accept that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I now demand the previous question.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Let me first make a further amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. I can not yield further.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then we will vote down the previous question.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question; and on a division there were—ayes 95, noes 108.

So the previous question was not ordered.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I move now, in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Labor, to insert the same privilege for that committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAIRD. I do not see the chairman of the Military Committee present, and move to amend by inserting that committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BREWER. I move to amend by inserting the Committee on the District of Columbia also.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 97, noes 115.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SPRINGER. I now demand the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the previous question will not be ordered. This proposition has never had the consideration of a committee of this House, which it certainly should have before it is enacted into law.

The SPEAKER. That does not prevent a motion to refer.

Mr. RANDALL. With a view to have a proper committee of the House investigate the subject fully, I move that it be committed to the Committee on Printing, with leave to report at any time.

Mr. HOLMAN. Would it not be better to refer it to the Committee on Rules?

Mr. RANDALL. I think not. The Committee on Printing is preferable, because it can give an estimate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no preference.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not understand the gentleman from Illinois to object.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not.

The SPEAKER. Pending the demand for the previous question, the gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to refer this subject to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. RANDALL. With leave.

The SPEAKER. That can only be done by unanimous consent. The Chair thinks, however, that this is privileged under the rules of the House, relating, as it does, to the business of the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask if the Committee on Appropriations have not this same order?

Mr. RANDALL. They have; but so have all the committees which are charged with the preparation of appropriation bills, including the Post-Office Committee. But the gentleman from Georgia will notice that this is a new plan of giving this privilege to all the committees, because if it is to be extended to those mentioned here, it had better go to all. But at least it should be considered by a proper committee of the House before action is taken.

Mr. BLOUNT. The only reason why I asked the question was that the gentleman from Pennsylvania suggested that the committee might furnish an estimate, and I thought he might appreciate the idea that it might be very difficult to form an estimate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to refer the resolution to the Committee on Printing.

The motion was agreed to.

CLAIMS ALLOWED.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to submit a resolution under the consent of the Committee on Appropriations. When it has been read I will state the object of it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to transmit to the House a schedule of all claims allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act approved June 20, 1874, since the allowance of those which are embraced in House Executive Documents numbered 19 and 31, Fiftieth Congress, first session.

Mr. RANDALL. I will state the object of the resolution. It is to expedite the payment of claims due to various claimants by the Government under provision of existing law. It embraces the following subjects: Pay of two and three year volunteers; bounty to volunteers and their widows; bounty under the act of July 28, 1866; commutation of rations to prisoners of war in Confederate prisons; for horses lost in the military service; compensation to postmasters readjusted under the act of March 3, 1883. The effect is to bring to the attention of Congress immediately all these classes of claims.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I desire to say just a word in this connection.

Mr. RANDALL. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. This resolution is all right; but there should be an estimate made in advance for this class of cases, and an appropriation should be made in advance that would cover this class of cases, so that they would not have to be held back until included in appropriation bills. I desire to call the attention of the House to that suggestion now, in the hope that we may reach a reform in that regard, so that all these claims that come from the different auditing offices may be estimated for, and so that they may be paid as they are allowed by the different auditing officers of the Government.

Mr. RANDALL. For myself I can only say that the plan suggested by the gentleman from Iowa was formerly in practice, and was changed by the House, whether advantageously or not Congress can determine by its future course.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Do I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania to say that the plan suggested by me is wholly impracticable?

Mr. RANDALL. I did not say that at all. I said the plan was formerly in practice.

Mr. REED. Is the gentleman from Pennsylvania to give us an opportunity to vote on that in the appropriation bill by proposing an appropriation to pay future decisions?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think the gentleman from Pennsylvania has the power to prevent the vote being taken.

Mr. REED. I have found the gentleman from Pennsylvania very often has the power. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. I ask the previous question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. PETERS. I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa——

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to know if there is objection to the present consideration of the resolution. The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized.

Mr. PETERS. I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] a question. Is it not a fact that in the deficiency bill which has been reported to the House there are a large number of claims therein appropriated for which were found to be due by officers of the Government more than a year ago?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I understand that to be true.

Mr. PETERS. I give as an instance the item on page 57 of the bill:

For bounty to volunteers and their widows and legal heirs, 1871 and prior years, $283,956.56.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. In reply to the gentleman from Kansas I will say the auditing officers of the Government are constantly allowing claims in advance of our ability to appropriate for them or in advance of their being appropriated for in fact.

In my opinion that system should be remedied, no matter what the practice of the House has been, so that if these sums are allowed by the auditing officers the money should be appropriated.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed a bill (S. 154) for the erection of a public building at Milwaukee, Wis.; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. BURNES. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. COX in the chair).

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk commenced to read the title of the bill.

Mr. BURROWS (interrupting). At what time would it be in order to have the report read?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk is now reading the bill by its title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4271) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. BURNES. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first and formal reading of the bill.

There was no objection.

Mr. BURNES. It will be remembered that the general deficiency bill at the last session of Congress was perfected and passed through both Houses of Congress, but for some cause it failed to receive the Executive sanction.

The Committee on Appropriations, after conference with others who were engaged in the preparation and perfecting of the general deficiency bill of last year, came to the conclusion to adhere to the text of the bill which in the last session of the Forty-ninth Congress received the sanction of both the House and Senate and of the House and Senate conference committees.

That much work having been done, completed, agreed upon by the committees of the two Houses, it was deemed best not to disturb it now, nor reopen the controversies concerning which both Houses had finally agreed.

If the House will concur in this view and pass this bill, members may rest assured that it will be speedily followed by the usual urgent deficiency bill, in which every urgent public necessity can be provided for. Such a bill can be prepared, I am confident, within the next ten days or two weeks, and reported for consideration to the House. If these suggestions should prove satisfactory an immense amount of labor which we have once before performed will not have to be repeated. In the bill now under consideration we have adhered closely, and I believe entirely, to the text of the bill of the last year. Nothing new has been introduced. I hope that nothing new will be introduced, because if introduced in this body it will be introduced elsewhere, and this bill, which ought to have been a law last year, may linger for months, to the delay of payments justly due to thousands of our citizens.

I hope therefore, and I am authorized to express the hope on the part of the Committee on Appropriations, that unless the matter be urgent, unless it be extremely urgent, no gentleman will attempt to ingraft upon this bill any new item that may properly be left to wait for the forthcoming urgent deficiency bill, to which allusion has been made. Then, also, the general deficiency bill will of course follow after the urgent deficiency bill; so that there will be two early occasions upon which everything can be provided for that ought to be provided for. With these words of explanation I submit the matter to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. CANNON. Will my friend yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BURNES. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES]. I wish to ask whether this provision in the middle of the twenty-seventh page is not new legislation. I understood him to say that there was nothing new in this bill.

Mr. BURNES. No new appropriation. In answer to my friend from Arkansas I will say that the provision he alludes to is not a new appropriation; it is a limitation upon an appropriation. It is a provision which the Attorney-General of the United States has suggested to the committee as a matter of great moment, intended to save large sums of money now being unjustly withheld or diverted from the Treasury.

Mr. ROGERS. It is not, however, in the old bill.

Mr. BURNES. It is not in the old bill.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman explain to the House the object of this provision? I have not had an opportunity of examining it at all.

Mr. BURNES. The object of the limitation is this: We are advised by the Attorney-General that a controversy has arisen between the Department of Justice and certain clerks in several of the circuit and district courts of the United States with regard to certain fees which those clerks refuse to recognize as any part of the official fees of their offices. I will instance cases of habeas corpus, arising perhaps more frequently in California than in any other portion of the country. Fees are charged there and elsewhere in cases of naturalization and in habeas corpus cases, which, as I am informed, go exclusively into the pockets of the clerks. It is believed by the Department of Justice that those are official fees, and the Attorney-General desires authority for the Department to refuse to approve bills in favor of such clerks until those fees, which he regards as official fees, shall be reported and accounted for.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. He simply desires that they shall be included in the emolument returns of the office.

Mr. BURNES. That is it. They refuse to include them in their emolument returns.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say only a few words about this bill. The gentleman from Missouri in charge of the bill [Mr. BURNES] has substantially covered the ground. I think it is the desire of both sides of the committee that this bill shall pass substantially as it is, and pass speedily. As the gentleman from Missouri has well said, it was agreed upon in conference, with many items that are now omitted, just at the close of the last session of Congress. I do not think it would be profitable to occupy much time in an inquiry as to why this bill, or a bill similar to this, failed in the last Congress. Sufficient is it to say that in perhaps the last hour before the Congress expired there was an agreement in conference upon the bill, but there was not time to write out that agreement and submit it to the House and the Senate, and have it adopted and signed by the President.

Much criticism was indulged in at the time by this side of the House because of the delay in presenting the bill originally, and I believe that even more criticism was indulged in by the then other side of the House on account of the same delay. The truth is that the items contained in part in this bill appropriated moneys that were due to creditors of the United States, many, many hundreds of them, in sums of from $5 to $1,000, those creditors being widely distributed throughout the length and breadth of the country. Many of the sums had been owing to these creditors for from twenty to twenty-five years. In several hundred cases they were moneys due to private soldiers, a part of the pay or bounty that had been owing them for over twenty years. This bill carries all those items which were due up to the time it was agreed upon last March.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] was wise, I think, in the question he propounded to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations a few minutes ago, suggesting the propriety of an amendment of the law so as to make permanent appropriations to pay these claims as they are audited by the officers of the Government.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania well said in reply that formerly such was the case; and I was very glad indeed that he did not at this time give notice of any objection to the re-enactment of that permanent appropriation. The history of that permanent appropriation is that prior to the Forty-fourth Congress (which was the first Democratic Congress subsequent to the commencement of the war) there was a permanent appropriation for these purposes, and that as the claims were audited the money was promptly paid from the Treasury. But under the lead of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, then upon this committee, and others, that law was repealed; and from that time to this—from 1875 to the present time—there has been an annual appropriation for this purpose.

I do not wish to take further time in explanation of this bill. I think perhaps our time would be better taken up in passing it promptly and letting these creditors of the Government receive the poor pittance to which they are entitled; for many of them, as we all know from letters which we have received, are absolutely suffering for want of these small appropriations, which might enable them to "keep the wolf from the door."

Mr. LAIRD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] a question. I understand from the public prints that this committee has stricken from the present bill an item of half a million dollars for the Post-Office Department. Now, in my State and in the States of Kansas and Michigan about 3,000 miles of railroad have been built during the year just closed; and upon those lines of travel there is either no postal service or the service furnished is indifferent. I therefore ask whether the omission from this bill of the item to which

I have referred will affect the condition of the postal service in our western country.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman from Nebraska that the bill as agreed upon in conference, and which failed in the last Congress, carried appropriations to the amount of $4,750,000; this bill carries $3,950,000—$800,000, in round numbers, less than the former bill.

As to the postal service, it is true that this bill does not include items which were in that bill intended for the service of the last fiscal year, which expired on the 30th of June, 1887; and they are not included for the reason that if we should give the money now it could not be expended. I grant you that the money ought to have been given last March, and we ought to have had more efficient postal service in many portions of the country, as we would have had if that money had been given. But as it was not appropriated, the time in which the service could be performed has passed, so that it is not necessary to give it now.

Mr. LAIRD. When was the bill reported from the committee to the House?

Mr. CANNON. This bill was reported yesterday.

Mr. LAIRD. I mean the original bill in the last session of Congress.

Mr. CANNON. My recollection is that it was reported five or six days before the expiration of the Congress, and that many of the appropriation bills were presented for the first time in the House within the ten days immediately preceding the expiration of the Congress.

Mr. PETERS. Is it not a fact that this bill did not reach the President until fifteen minutes before the adjournment of the last Congress?

Mr. CANNON. This bill never reached the President.

Mr. PETERS. I mean the deficiency bill of the last session.

Mr. CANNON. That deficiency bill never reached the President; the conference report, though agreed upon, was never written up, and was never adopted by the two Houses.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The difference, I understand, between the amount of this bill and that carried by the deficiency bill of the last session is over one million and three-quarters.

Mr. CANNON. No, sir; $800,000.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think the difference is $1,800,000.

Mr. CANNON. I do not see how the gentleman reaches that result.

Mr. GROSVENOR. According to the figures I have here, this bill embraces appropriations of $2,951,000, against almost $5,000,000 embraced in the bill of the last session.

Mr. CANNON. We took as the basis of this bill the matters agreed on in the conference report.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What I want to know is, what are the items which were in the last deficiency bill and which are omitted from this bill, and why are they omitted?

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman, as I understand, is laboring under a mistake. The conference report agreed upon in fact between the conferees of the two Houses was never presented to either House; but that conference report is in existence. We took that report as the basis of this bill; and we have made this bill accord with it, omitting matters for which appropriations, if now made, could not be expended. In other words, as the fiscal year expired without money having been appropriated for certain items, the money was not, of course, expended, and thereby the public service suffered; but the time for the expenditure of that money has passed, and no good could be done by appropriating for those items now.

Mr. MORROW. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. MORROW. Were not the services performed as intended by the original bill?

Mr. CANNON. The original deficiency bill of last March?

Mr. MORROW. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. In many instances the services were not performed, and could not be without a violation of law.

Mr. MORROW. Do the differences here relate simply to those services which were not performed?

Mr. CANNON. Substantially so.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, I had not anticipated the remarks which have just been made by my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], nor perhaps the inquiry of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD]; but, after what has been said, I feel sure it is my duty to remark in reply that there has been a great misunderstanding of the facts relating to the subjects which have been under consideration by those gentlemen.

This deficiency bill in the last Congress was passed through the House of Representatives before some of the other general appropriation bills, before some of the most important appropriation bills that go through this House, went to the Senate of the United States. The same time, therefore, was given for its consideration elsewhere that was given for the consideration of other appropriation bills. Not only that, sir, but when there was a fear that the Post-Office service, to which allusion has been made, would not be provided for, that the payments to the honored soldiery of the country for lost horses and for bounty and back pay would not be made, I had the honor, taking the responsibility largely upon myself, but acting in accord with many of my colleagues on the committee, to state the circumstances to the House and introduce a bill, under a motion to suspend the rules and pass the same, which I now ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. BURNES. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

"A bill to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

"Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the objects hereinafter expressed for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, namely:
